

RUSSIAN MURDERER CAUGHT IN SEATTLE

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Seattle, Aug. 29.—That a Russian named C. Carlson taken into custody on a charge of assault is wanted in Russia for murder and prison breaking and that Sam Carbett, of the city detective force, and Juvenile Officer Vincet who arrested him are in line for a reward of $5000 are two discoveries made since Carlson's arrest.
Back of the arrest there is a thrilling story of crime, but Carlson and those with whom he had been associated in Seattle have refused to recite it in detail. The true name of the prisoner has also been withheld. He will be held pending advices from his native land. The part of the story told the officers is that Carlson murdered a man several years ago and was sent to prison for life. He escaped twice, and the second time he fled to America, thinking that he would be safe from detection in this country.

The prisoner was taken back to jail two months after his first bold dash for liberty. He escaped a second time by digging a tunnel under his cell. A $5000 reward was offered by the Russian authorities for his capture.
Carlson arrived in Vancouver, B. C., and sent for his wife and three children. Five months later the family removed to Seattle where Carlson secured employment as a clerk in the grocery of M. Mniakoff, a Russian.
The prisoner's wife brought with her to America a little Russian girl named Kate Negoloff, now 14 years old. When Carlson was arrested for assaulting the girl he threatened her with death if she divulged Carlson's secret. However she told of the crime for which he is wanted in Russia.

all of whom delighted to participate in the celebration.

The second division, was composed of the New York national guards and the naval militia. The third was made up of the Irish volunteers.

Heroes Like Schoolboys.

The fourth division was the main section and in it appeared the heroes of the day. They rode in autos, enjoying themselves as much as schoolboys on their way to a picnic, the American athletes waved their hands and hats to the cheering crowds.

Souvenir Seekers.

The athletes evidently were having the time of their lives. Whenever the parade was halted, hundreds of gaily dressed girls and young women, wearing flags and flowers, crowded about the autos in which the athletes rode and begged them for souvenirs. Anything would do, a button, a piece of flag, a flower—for scraps of paper belonging to Martin Sheridan, Forrest Smithson or Ralph Rose is worth more to Miss Manhattan today than an original signed photograph of David Warfield.

Following the athletes was the fifth division made up of the various athletic clubs. The sixth was composed of the members of the Y. M. C. A. teams of various kinds and in other divisions were representative delegations from athletic associations, bicycling associations, the various athletic leagues and more than one thousand children from the public and parochial schools.

Police Hold Crowds.

The parade following the changing course of Broadway, the police continually forced to hold the crowds back to make way. Traffic on the surface streetcar lines was practically suspended, as none of the crosstown lines could operate within the long stretches of march.

The objective point was city hall square, where the exercises were held and the formal welcome extended by a representative committee of 500 New Yorkers, headed by Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. The crowd here was the greatest ever seen except on election night. The big approach to the Brooklyn bridge was swarmed with people. The World and Tribune buildings on the east side and the Home Life Aid buildings on the west were packed to the tops with spectators. The streets were blocked and the police made little effort to clear the way. The soldiers and sailors and marchers formed about the stand.

Medals Presented.

Each athlete received an appropriate gold medal as a testimonial of his valor and his prowess, but there were three special prizes. The first of these was a magnificent silver cup, presented to John J. Hayes, winner of the great Marathon race. A beautiful "consolation cup" was presented to Carpenter, who finished first in the 400-meter run and was disqualified by the English judges, not being allowed to compete when the race was re-run. Robbins, who finished second in the same event, also was given a "consolation cup."

One of the features of the ceremonies was the singing of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" by the United Singing Societies. All the crowd joined in and the national anthem seldom has been carried in such a volume. Tonight the celebration will be continued with a party for the athletes at the New York theater at which it is expected a big demonstration will be made.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 29.—Charged with buying ice cream soda for a neighbor's wife, whose photographs are allowed to be the chief adornment of his home, James H. Jones of Pasadena is today the defendant in a divorce suit. Mrs. Jones alleges that Jones has photographs of Mrs. Cora Mulford dressed in bathing suits, kimono, tailored suits and fluffy gowns.

The Abatement of Nuisances.
A perception is dawning upon the people at large of the fact that certain kinds of nuisances, hitherto regarded as hopelessly unavoidable, are not in the least necessary.

It was said by an eminent scientist the other day that two-thirds of the diseases from which human beings suffer come from easily-avoidable causes. Among the most important of these causes he mentioned the housefly, the mosquito and the common rat.

Until very recently it has been taken for granted that there was no possibility of escape from these three pests, which are bad enough when only the annoyances they cause are considered. But recent discovery has made us aware that they are carriers of many diseases—the housefly of typhoid fever chiefly; the mosquito of malaria and yellow fever; and the rat of bubonic plague and various maladies attributable to filth.

If it be asked, What shall be done? the answer seems to be that important steps are now being taken, especially in New Jersey, toward the extermination of mosquitoes. The insects can never be entirely wiped out, but, most importantly by ditching and draining their large breeding areas, their numbers can be reduced to such a point that they will no longer be a source of discomfort and serious danger.

As for the housefly, the problem is comparatively simple. Practically all these insects being hatched in stables, it is necessary merely to enforce local ordinances compelling all stable keepers to throw all refuse into closed rain-light bins (to be emptied at regular intervals), in order to do away with them entirely. Within a few months, if this plan were systematically pursued, there would be no flies.

The rat is more difficult to deal with. Its habit of concealment and extraordinary fecundity render the extermination of the species out of the question. But government experts say that by the adoption of suitable expedients, and especially by the employment of the scientific "gullotine" traps, the numbers of these pestiferous rodents could be greatly reduced.—Rene Bache, in Lippincott's.

Cheapness of Building Materials.

One of the paradoxical results of the financial stringency we have so recently passed through has been the impetus given to building operations. Men who are trained observers of the signs of the times are advising those who intend to build at any time in the near future to begin right now, for the reason that the price of raw materials of all kinds and also of labor is very considerably lower than it has been, and consequently the builder would be assured of a much better return for his investment than would have been possible had he built at a time when every price was at the top notch and labor was costly and difficult to obtain.

Not only are construction materials lower in price just now than they have been for years, but labor is cheaper. The reason in both cases is the same—the supply is now largely in excess of the demand. It looks as if the bottom has been reached and as if the time had come when stock must be made to move and tied-up capital must once more be made to earn its way. This can be done only by stimulating the demand even at the cost of selling for a time at an absolute loss.

A movement that has developed into a very active campaign was started a few weeks ago by the American Lumberman. It was inspired by the startling statement of a Cleveland (O.) lumber dealer, who recently awarded the contract for building a house he was prevented from building in 1907 because of the too great cost. He was able to save over last year's estimates nearly 30 per cent.

Sacramento, Cal., Aug. 29.—With blooded horses from all parts of the state entered in the different events, the racing program of the 55th annual state fair opened today at Agricultural park before a big crowd of spectators. Interest in the racing program has been keen for the past several days and with the opening card today, lovers of horse flesh turned out en masse.
