HARPER COMPANY GOOD COMEDIANS

Georgia Harper and her company appeared last night in the comedy drama "She Couldn't Marry Two," a new name for an old play known as "Niobe." The play is a clever piece of work, replete with humorous situations, and offering much opportunity for good acting.

Miss Harper as "Niobe," the mythological statue, which came to life in the home of a wealthy gentleman in modern New York, was excellent, the witty lines in the role of the resurrected and vitalized block of marble bringing many spontaneous bursts of applause from the audience.

Mr. Joseph Detrick appeared as Amos Peter Dunn, the insurance magnate, in whose possession the statue had been placed for safe keeping. During Mr. Detrick's engagement here his parts have been of a rather serious character, and his appearance last night in a genuine comedy role was something of a diversion. Detrick proved himself to be a versatile actor, his work as Peter leaving little to be desired.

Leota Howard, as Mrs. Caroline Dunn, the wife of Peter, gave a very good portrayal of the perplexed wife Francis Williamson, as "Helen Griffin," Peter's mother-in-law, was also good, and the rest of the cast acquitted themselves in a very creditable fashion.

THE REASON FOR OUR EARLY EDITION

Being good, enthusiastic Salemites, the entire Journal force wanted to be at the fair grounds on "this" day, and for that reason this paper is coming out at noon instead of at the usual time. The rest of the week however the regular 3 o'clock edition will be issued.
