TWO YOUNG LADIES HURT IN MISHAP

(Special Correspondence.)

Albany, Or., Oct. 6.—Mr. Stewart, a commercial traveler for Lang & Co., of Portland, and two lady friends, Miss Clara Welch and Miss Vesta Wallace, were out horseback riding Sunday afternoon when the horses became frightened at an auto. Both women were thrown, but were not seriously hurt. One of the horses ran into a wire fence, and, it is expected, will not live. The ladies were brought to town in an auto, and Stewart followed behind with the horses.

At a meeting of the members of the board of control of the "Albany College Student" today Will H. Steele was elected editor. Miss Lucille Hart, a graduate of the Albany high school, was elected business manager and Roy Nutting assistant.

Mr. and Mrs. Cooke, M. Lippencott and wife and Miss Greenwalt, all of Portland, are visiting at Miss Greenwalt's sister, Mrs. Rockey E. Mason.

Of the 122 Granges in Oregon, Linn county has the three oldest.

Mr. L. E. McKinney, of East Albany, died suddenly Sunday evening of Bright's disease. The deceased leaves a wife, two sons and a daughter.

G. Company, O. N. G., have established a good target rifle range near Knox butte, east of Albany, and active practice will commence at once.

The body of James Nixon, the prominent farmer, who was drowned in the Willamette river at Harrisburg last Tuesday, was found Saturday evening by Clarence George, a neighbor, about a mile below where he was drowned.

BRIDGES OF NEW YORK SOLVE TRAFFIC QUESTION

Twenty-five years ago the first Brooklyn bridge gave the engineer's earliest answer to the traffic problem to which the ferries were no longer adequate and became one of the modern wonders of the world.

Today there are four bridges built or building, each of the new ones far surpass in size and capacity that pioneer structure, and there is, besides, the tunnel under the East river, which was opened to the public early this year.

Of the bridges, the newest and greatest in traffic capacity is the Manhattan bridge, which, after years of delay over the plans is now being hurried to completion to help take the pressure off the existing avenues of travel.

The Manhattan structure stands as the latest and most advanced embodiment of the suspension bridge, while as a traffic channel it possesses, or will possess when completed, the greatest capacity of any bridge yet built. That is the main purpose for which it has been designed; to allow the passage of as many cars, vehicles and foot passengers as engineering skill can make room for within the limits of the approved design.

In total length over all, including approaches, from Canal street in Manhattan to Hassau street in Brooklyn, the Manhattan bridge measures 6855 feet (approximately one and five-sixteenths miles) as against the 7200 feet of the Williamsburg bridge. Its main span is 1450 feet long and the two side spans are each 725 feet. The total length of the spans is thus 2900 feet. The main span of the Williamsburg bridge is 1600 feet, the longest suspension spon in the world, and that of the old Brooklyn bridge is 1595 feet.

The Manhattan cables are slung from steel towers which stand 325 feet in height above the mean high water level of the East river, 90 feet higher than the Williamsburg towers They contain, together, 12500 tons of steel. The steel construction begins at a point 32 feet above water level. Below that the masonry foundation goes down to a depth of 92 feet below the river surface. If not the longest of New York's bridges, the new one is at least the highest, for the bridge floor at the highest point of the center span is 143 feet above the river, two and one-half feet higher than the Williamsburg bridge.

The shore anchorages at either end of the new bridge rest on foundations 237 feet long by 182 feet wide. Each anchorage contains 115,000 cubic yards of masonry and weighs 232,000 tons.—George E. Mayo in American Industries.

"I was not able to do my own work, owing to the female trouble from which I suffered. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me wonderfully, and I am so well that I can do as big a day's work as I ever did. I wish every sick woman would try it.

MUSHROOM RAILWAY TOWNS IN ASIA

Quetta has been born of the railway. Twenty-five years ago it had no corporate existence worth mentioning; now it is one of the largest marts in India—the center to which Persians, Afghans, Mongols and the mysterious traders from unknown central Asia flock with goods to be bartered for others brought in by Karachi, or to be sold for export from there. They come mostly on camels, for the Ameer of Afghanistan, through whose territory most of the main trade routes run, will permit no traffic to pass by Quetta if it is to be consigned onward by rail from Chaman. The line goes northward from Quetta for 100 miles; but the ruler will not even directly countenance the accursed thing if he can avoid it. The camels and their owners are compelled to travel over the tremendous passes under which the railway burrows if they attain the market for which they are bound.

Quetta itself is almost 6000 feet above sea level, and the line beyond it still climbs upward among the Alpine peaks that separate Afgahanistan from Belogchistan, until it reaches the Kohjak pass—famous as the route by which Lord Roberts emerged after his historical march to Candahar. Here the line enters a three-mile tunnel, which is unique among such constructions in being guarded by a portcullis, as though it were the gateway to a mediaeval castle, and by a force of soldiers. The train emerges on the other side within sight of Afghanistan, stretching away northward as a comparatively level plain to the mass of rugged mountains that bound the horizon in that direction.

The train dashes downward along a series of zigzags to where Chaman station stands, fortified and garrisoned by British troops with a line of boundary posts showing close beside it to mark the Ameer's jurisdiction prevent the locomotive from proceeding farther. Little traffic comes to the railway from that direction. Few passengers alight at it for Afghanistan, and hardly any goods for there are consigned to it. But it is one of the two stations for the country; it is within three weeks of London, and some day it will doubtless be an important stopping place on the route from the metropolis to Central Asia, via Candahar and Cabul.—London Telegraph.

SPECIMEN OF CAMPAIGN ORATORY IN CALIFORNIA

The Fresno Republican essayed to reproduce from memory a portion of the speech of Thomas Dozier, chairman of the Republican convention, in nominating the Honorable Harry A. Melvin for justice of the supreme court. The following was the result of the effort:

"Gentlemen of the grand old glorious Republican party in the grand old glorious state of California when Harry Melvin receives the grand and glorious nomination of this great convention which I predict will lead to his triumphant election at the hands of the grand and glorious Republican party, the party of Abraham Lincoln and William McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt and which is going to grand and glorious victory this fall under the leadership of that grand and glorious, that peerless, that magnificent statesman William Howard Taft (tumultuous applause) all California will rejoice with you and me from Mount Shasta's rocky throat will roar peans of joy down the granite ribs of the Sierra will echo thunders of gladness the soft breezes of the southland will whisper it is he' across the broad valley will sweep the gale of joyance over the mountains and down to the coast will slip the breeze of brightness till every sun-kissed ripple and every seething surge will answer back to mountain and plain the glad chorus of rejoicing that the great and glorious, the magnificent jurist, Harry A. Melvin, of this banner Republican county of the great Republican state of California has received the suffrages of the peerless, the victorious Republican party."
