TO CONTROL TIMBER CUTTING

State or federal regulation of timber cutting on lands in private ownership is a new departure in the way of government regulation which may be effected this winter, say lumbermen in this city, as a result of the disastrous forest fires which have made this season historic in the annals of the lumber industry. Timber owners here and throughout the Lake and Northwestern states, who have begun to figure up the cost of the fires, have come to the conclusion that something more radical must be done than establishing scattered fire patrols. That this something will be regulation by the state or federal governments, which will not only insure greater protection from fire but will also protect the soil from erosion and the streams from floods and droughts, is indicated by the publication in one of the leading lumber journals of an opinion by Judge J. W. Judd, of the law department of Vanderbilt University, and formerly attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., on the power of the government to control timber cutting on private lands. In this opinion, Judge Judd traces the development of the powers of the federal government under the interstate commerce clause of the constitution and of the several states under their right of police power, and reaches the following conclusions: "The federal government has the power to regulate the use of the forests of the great watersheds of the country forming the source of the navigable waters, when such regulation has a direct connection with, and is necessary, in the opinion of congress, to the presvation of their navigability. The states, acting singly or in compact, with the consent of congress, can regulate the use of the forests within their limits, when such regulation is necessary: to preserve the health and comfort of the people; or to protect commerce by preserving the navigable streams." In support of these views he cites a number of recent decisions, notably one by the supreme court of Maine in which it upheld the right of the state to restrict destructive lumbering in the interest of the general welfare. This is substantially the position taken by the supporters of the Appalachian bill at the last session of congress. That the lumbermen, who have hitherto usually fought such legislation, should be falling into line in considerable significant.

PRICE OF TURKEYS GOING UP

Chicago, Nov. 19.—Again the turkey crop is short "alarmingly short," as it is just prior to Thanksgiving day each year in justification of the prices charged. As Chicago consumes 750,000 pounds of turkey, in additon to half a million pounds of other poultry at Thanksgiving time, the "shortage" cost this city alone a pretty penny, in the neighborhood of $125,000. Last year turkey prices soared like the wise old gobblers that take to rosting high just prior to the festivities, the advance coming about the time the housewives began buying in earnest. Curiously enough the severity of the annual " shortages" of turkeys, cranberries, pumpkins and oysters are simultaneous—all are short together at the crucial time. Everything that is handled in South Water street gets "scarce" in the retail markets and the scarcity is traced to the commission merchants, whose consignors hear only of a glut in the Chicago markets. Last year the commission merchants blamed the farmers and poultry shippers, the poultry shippers pointed an accusing finger at South Water street where practically the produce of the city in wholesale lots is handled, and the retailer put the blame there also, pleading innocence of extortion himself. Turkeys went up to 25 cents a pound last year, cranberries to 12½ cents the quart, pumpkins to 20 cents each and oysters to 40 cents, as against 12 cents for turkeys, 7 cents for cranberries, 15 cents for pumpkins and 25 cents for oysters. This year the turkey scare has a new wrinkle, appendicitis having developed, and of course the crop is affected. Chicago Thanksgiving dinner this year will cost about $2.500,000, not at prevailing prices but at the "shortage" prices that soon will prevail.
