

WOULD MAKE MURDERERS BENEFIT TO HUMANITY

(United Press Leased Wire.)
 San Francisco, Nov. 25.—Whether animals condemned to die may be used by the state to submit to an experiment with the germs of tuberculosis is the question that is agitating lawyers and physicians here to-day. The question arose from the suggestion of Dr. Wallace A. Briggs, president of the state board of prison, that the state board of prison should be authorized to turn over to the medicals for experimental purposes the interest of science. The purpose here is to determine whether it will be necessary to legislate the criminal at the disposal of the state and that the probability of being declared unconstitutional upon the ground that punishment shall not be subjected to cruel or unusual punishment is apparent. Dr. Briggs suggests that a lure be held out to convicts in the form of an offer of pardon by the board in the event that they give the inoculation. The board says: "If Koch is right, our crusade against tuberculosis must be directed against the spread of this disease from one human being to another; if Von Behring is right, it must be directed against the spread of tuberculosis from the bovine to the human family. "Vast interests, economic as well as humanitarian, hinge on the solution of this question. To an early and positive solution, however, experimentation on human beings is necessary." The views of physicians, health officials and others interested in the crusade against the "white plague" are being sought by the prison directors. Commenting on the plan, Assistant United States Attorney Robert E. Devlin said last night: "Persons condemned to death might volunteer in the interest of science. Condemned criminals would have to die any way and the experiments are not necessarily fatal. Cures have been effected and those who volunteer would be under the watchful care of physicians. The condemned person has forfeited his life to society and I cannot see why there should be any objection to such experiments when the reasons for them are considered."

DON'T MERELY GO TO BATTLE GO TO WAR

Tacitus, the Roman historian, writing of the Batavians, said: "Others go to battle; these people go to war."

With this persistent people, a battle was merely a part of the war, of the campaign, no matter whether it were won or lost.

In modern business life the same idea prevails. With the merchant who is destined to win, advertising is a CAMPAIGN—not a mere "splurge." A big ad is merely a PART of that campaign—not a thing upon which success or failure wholly rests.

In a war, a great many big battles are apt to be fought—some of them costly, some disastrous—but all inevitable, as a part of a winning campaign.

In advertising a good many big ads must be used. Some of them may seem too expensive—some also a loss of money.

But all are a part of any winning campaign in business—all are incidental to the success of the campaign. And when a business campaign succeeds—as every persistent and wise one will—the COST will seem very small, indeed!

PLUNGE

through the clouds in six eventful hours, filled with heart-breath ecstasies and feats of daring.

Brutal and bleeding we alighted only to find that we were in the middle of a desert giving no sign of human habitation.

Cold and hungry, we wandered throughout the entire night; lost in the bottom lands of the Colorado river and were completely exhausted at noon the next day when we finally reached Ehrenberg, with its welcome food and shelter.

Six hours after leaving Los Angeles shrouded in clouds, Monday morning at 10:18 o'clock, the balloon United States swept across the Colorado river at an altitude of 16,000 feet, more than 250 miles from our starting point. Ten minutes later the pendix of our balloon broke, the cold wind on the Arizona side of the river forced the illuminating gas from the bag and we dropped with terrific speed onto the desert, the balloon dragging us for at least a mile before settling.

During our flight—our average height was 10,000 feet where a steady easterly current carried us along at a rate of over 40 miles an hour well above the clouds that buried Los Angeles county.

We crossed the mountains within a quarter of a mile of the summit of San Jacinto peak and continued a straight easterly course over the desert ranges.

Midway between San Jacinto peak and the Colorado river a sudden strata of cold air condensed the gas and hurled us from an immense height onto the rocks below. By clinging to the rigging of the balloon we escaped instant death.

With terrific force the empty basket swept the ground and was shattered. Two bags of ballast were torn loose and most of our scant store of provisions and outfit lost. Relieved of this weight the United States leaped back into the sky to an altitude so much over 16,000 feet that the instruments failed to register the height. Then we resumed our eastward course falling slowly to the elevation at which we crossed the Colorado river.

Captain Mueller said today that our final landing was the most dangerous experience he had ever been through. We only saved ourselves from being crushed by climbing into the balloon rigging. As the big bag emptied of its gas, belled like a sail in the wind and the basket plowed a deep furrow through the rocks and cactus of the plain.

Badly bruised we finally succeeded in extricating ourselves from the tangled netting of the balloon and started to hunt for the nearest habitation. Wandering in the bottom lands of the Colorado river all Monday night we reached Ehrenberg completely exhausted after many hours without food, Tuesday noon. Both of us are badly bruised and Captain Mueller will rest here several days before attempting the trip to Los Angeles.

The United States gas bag is in good condition but is in the middle of the desert.

Indians, frightened at the appearance of the balloon are holding dances today to drive away the evil spirits.

THE EVIDENCE OF RETURNING PROSPERITY

The banks may be said to be real barometers of business. Just as business depression is reflected in reducing deposits, so the improvement in business conditions finds expression in the increasing deposits.

When a bank has the greatest number of depositors, the largest total of savings and shows a new and definite growth in all branches it is a very satisfactory evidence that the returning prosperity is not confined to any one class, but is reaching the masses of the people; and that is the chief good.

The "Comparative Statements of Deposits" which we have been publishing for years, shows 1908 to be the banner year and reflects in no small measure the growth of Salem and the Pacific Northwest; and one need not be much of an optimist to feel that this Northwest country of ours has greater growth and better times ahead than any we have yet seen.

A general invitation to open an account with us is extended alike to the young man starting in business and to the older concerns already established; to those who have newly come to make a home or build up a business in this Great Northwest and to those who appreciate the convenience of a checking account.

In the most practical way possible you will thus become familiar with the many advantages which we are enabled to extend to depositors through a system that has been steadily developed and perfected by the progressive and growing
