The Mental Inferiority of Women Explained.

In the December American Magazine, Professor W. I. Thomas, of Chicago University, continues his remarkable series of articles on women. In the present case his article is on "The Mind of Woman." Following is an interesting passage:

"One of the most important facts standing out in a comparison of the physical traits of men and women is that man is a more specialized instrument for motion, quicker on his feet, with a longer reach, and fitted for bursts of energy. His most immediate, most fascinating and most remunerative interest consequently became the pursuit of game. This pursuit stimulated him to the invention of devices for killing and capture and the aptitude for invention was later extended to the invention of tools and mechanical devices in general and finally developed into a settled habit of scientific interest. Stated in another way, this means that woman could not have the varied life and roving experience, the stress and strain which man encountered, because she could not leave her children; and indeed her less facility of motion is connected with her organic adaptation to the bearing of children. Her activities were therefore limited to the development of plant life, to weaving and pottery and handling the products of the chase. Thus so simple a matter as relatively unrestricted motion on the part of man and relatively restricted motion on the part of woman determined the occupations of each, and these occupations in turn created the characteristic mental life of each. At this point woman was already becoming the mental inferior of man, not on account of inherent psychological defects but through her seclusion and limited experience just as the European peasant in his seclusion becomes dull in comparison with the scientist in his more varied world.

"Early man had no design of being hard toward woman. Then as now he simply gave her interests no particular thought. He had acquired the habit of accomplishing things, and he employed animals, slaves and women as he now employs machinery, steam and electricity. This left him only the more stimulating work and the oversight; in other words, the more mental part of the work."

"LION AND THE MOUSE" ANOTHER GRAFT EXPOSER

The remark of a federal judge, who recently offered the nomination of one of the great political parties for a certain trust of a million dollars, "for God's sake leave me my judicial honor, and the respect of my fellow citizens—we have the keynote of the Klein's great play, "The Lion and the Mouse," which comes to the Grand opera house tonight. It is one of the many recent in which demonstrates beyond doubt that Mr. Klein did not begin to understand the center of reality when he wrote his great drama, which has become the public of the entire country for the past three years. The drama and the press in reference to graft investigations, have used the play, which Henry B. Harris has the wisdom to produce, as text for columns and editorials, and lately the President of the United States has tried to use the lesson taught in the "Lion and the Mouse" as a guide document.

Rossmore, of the United States supreme bench, Ryder resolves to ruin, both financially and in reputation, the honest jurist. The former wreck has been accomplished, when Shirley Rossmore, his daughter, and Ryder's only son, Jefferson, return from a European trip. They meet a girl and had fallen in love. The girl, learning of her father's impending disgrace, sets about to save his reputation, and becomes a member of the money baron's household. How the lion succumbs to the mouse is unfair from the dramatist's standpoint to reveal.

Miss Edna Archer Crawford will be seen in the role of Shirley Rossmore, and Paul Everton is again dealing with the part of Ryder. It is claimed by the critics that Mr. Harris is this season sending the best company yet seen in the Klein drama.

A Good Piece of Advice for a Boy.

In the December American Magazine, Stewart Edward White begins a series of stories of boy life. If the remaining ones prove to be as good as this first one, Mr. White will have produced as notable a piece of work as he has yet given the public, and that is saying a good deal, because he is the author of "The Blazed Trail," "The Forest," and (with Samuel Hopkins Adams) "The Mystery."

The first story in this new series, which appears in the current American Magazine, is entitled "Until the Last Shot." Without revealing the story one may indicate its essence and its wholesome spirit by quoting the following brief extract:

"Bobby," said Mr. Kincaid gravely, always remember this all your life no matter what happens to you; a man is never defeated until the very last shot is fired. "And remember this, too, that even if he is defeated, he is not beaten, provided he has done the very best he could and has never lost heart."

Ekstromer, the Swedish vice-consul who committed suicide in St. Louis a short time ago, was short $10,000 in his accounts.

DON'T MERELY GO TO BATTLE GO TO WAR

Tacitus, the Roman historian, writing of the Batavians, said: "Others go to battle; these people go to war."

With this persistent people, a battle was merely a part of the war, of the campaign, no matter whether it were won or lost.

In modern business life the same idea prevails. With the merchant who is destined to win, advertising is a CAMPAIGN—not a mere "splurge." A big ad is merely a PART of that campaign—not a thing upon which success or failure wholly rests.

In a war, a great many big battles are apt to be fought—some of them costly, some disastrous—but all inevitable, as a part of a winning campaign.

In advertising a good many big ads must be used. Some of them may seem too expensive—some also a loss of money.

But all are a part of any winning campaign in business—all are incidental to the success of the campaign. And when a business campaign succeeds—as every persistent and wise one will—the COST will seem very small, indeed!
