NURSERY CANVASSER IS LOST WAS AGENT FOR A SALEM FIRM AND IS BEING SEARCHED FOR IN CALIFORNIA

[United Press Leased Wire.] San Francisco, May 13.—Footsore and disappointed but determined to continue his search until he learns the fate of his missing nephew, Lloyd W. Fansher, who disappeared from Medford, Or., November 23, 1908, J. E. Goodpasture is in San Francisco today after having walked most of the way here from southern Oregon. Fearing that a trip by rail would cause him to miss the man he is seeking, Goodpasture set out on foot from Medford several weeks ago. Reports that Fansher had been seen a few miles away led the Oregon man on, and he finally reached San Francisco, where he was greeted with another rumor which will probably drag him on southward as soon as he has rested for a few days. Goodpasture does not believe that his nephew is dead, although he has had graves opened, sought out dead bodies in morgues and trembled with fear at unfounded rumors that Fansher had met with a fatal accident. His theory is that the missing man's mind has been temporarily unbalanced by the death of his son, who was accidentally killed about a year ago at Portland, Or. Fansher, who was agent for a nursery company, with headquarters at Salem, Or., told his wife, three daughters and young son that he was going to Medford, a small town three miles from Medford, when he left home last November. Since that time his family has had no word from him. Several weeks ago Mrs. Fansher appealed to Goodpasture to take up the search for her husband. The missing man's uncle traced Fansher through Phoenix, Taalant, Ashland and Dunsuir. Finding persons who identified pictures of Fansher as a man who had passed that way on foot about the time of the Medford man's disappearance, Goodpasture decided to follow the trail as far as possible. At Dunsuir Goodpasture heard that an unidentified man had been killed on a train several weeks before. He opened the grave and decided that it did not contain the body of his nephew. At Sacramento and San Jose clues were found which led him to believe Fansher had been there and today he received reports that indicate that his nephew has started toward southern California. HUNDREDS FARMERS FLOODED Bakersfield, Cal., May 13.—Hundreds of farmers along the Kern river, who have been working night and day to prevent inroads of the water, and the inundation of their lands, today gave up the fight and relinquished to the triumphant flood waters 10,000 acres of wheat and barley lands. A few, in desperation, are still fighting the flood, but the breaks in the river levees grow hourly under the pressure of the water, and the attempt of work to rebuild the levees temporarily has failed. The principal loss so far sustained has been from inundation, although some stock and machinery has been destroyed. Farmers here declare that the present trouble is traceable to the refusal of large cattle owning firms to permit the farmers to repair the levees before the melting snows reached the levees. ANOTHER RICH STRIKE ON THE SANTIAM Professor Cumming, president of the Electric Mining Company of Gold Creek, came in from the camp this morning bringing some beautiful specimens of copper ore from a new ledge the company is opening up across the creek from their old ledge. The tunnel is in 20 feet, running up the ledge, which is wider than the tunnel. No assays have been made yet but the ore is certainly rich in copper. It is largely sulphide but carries considerable copper carbonate, which makes it very showy. BOY IN HIS SLEEP WALKS INTO BULLPEN San Luis Potosi, Mex., May 13.—Suffering from somnambulism, Juan Nolasco, a boy, wandered while asleep last night into the pen where the bulls for exhibition and fighting purposes are kept. One of the animals rushed upon the boy and gored him. The lad was tossed against a board fence, and was seriously injured. His screams summoned the keepers, who prevented the bulls from trampling their victim. Arner, 31300 Record 2:17 1/2.
