THE HORSE EDITOR HAS A FEW REMARKS ABOUT CONTEMPT OF COURT

LAW PROVIDES THAT ONE CAN HAVE MORE CONTEMPT FOR A JUDGE THAN A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE-- A COUPLE OF APROPOS STORIES

This American country is the best on earth. There isn't any doubt of it, for every American citizen who isn't a knocker on general principles, and some foreigners, will tell you so. It is a free country, too—in some ways.

Of course, if you want to fish or hunt, or get married, or keep a dog, or any little thing of that kind, you have to pay for the privilege; but it is a free country just the same. Anyone is at liberty to criticize the government, swear at congress, damn the president, ridicule the legislature, roast the governor or turn his or her pent-up wrath in a torrent loose at any old thing or person—that is, of course, if one expects the action of the judiciary from the rule. The judicial department which interprets the law is above the law. From the justices of the supreme court of the United States down to the justice of the peace at Meola or any other old place they are all over congress, the president and the law, and on a plane with Kaiser, emperor and czar. The heinous crime of "lese majeste" exists under our star "scrambled" banner as against them, alone. Of course, it is not called "lese majeste," but it is in evidence every day under the more democratic title of "contempt of court."

Under our somewhat loose-jointed laws, and not too liberal interpretation of them by the courts of all degrees, the "court" is the grand-hink-a-dink, with a velvet collar and brass buttons. It is true, that in the justice and smaller courts, the law in its wisdom fixed the amount which a person may be fined for contempt, the legislature providing that a man may only have $25 worth of contempt; at a time, for a justice of the peace but permits him to have $500 worth for a more dignified judge with a higher salary. Indeed, the law goes so far as to permit the offended judge in his official capacity to jug anyone for an indeterminate and indefinite time if he fails to successfully conceal his opinion of the court. Every court is a judge of its own contempt matters, and professional courtesy forbids other judges interfering with the punishment of this class of offenders.

It is fortunate indeed that the judges are not prone to disabuse this power, and it is greatly to their credit that they seldom invoke it; but it is true just the same. While the power was given to enable the courts to enforce their orders, it has of late years, especially in the federal courts, been made to take the place of the statutes, and persons are punished for contempt of court, while innocent of, or at least not punished for, the original offense with which they were charged.

For instance, there is the Shipp case, appealed from the Tennessee courts to the supreme court of the United States. The court had ordered Shipp, who was a sheriff, to protect a negro under arrest, and in his charge. A mob had threatened to hang the negro, and, subsequent to the court's order, did hang him; whereupon the sheriff, his deputies and some others were indicted for conspiracy to murder the negro, because they'd vere him up to the mob. How much resistance they made does not appear in the dispatches concerning the case, but that does not matter. In the trial of the case the killing of the negro was lost sight of, in the fact that in disobeying the orders of the court they had committed a greater offense, that of "lese majeste," or contempt of court.

Still the judges, as has been said, the judges, outside of the federal court, are not prone to disabuse their power.

In Ohio, in the old common peias court, Ben Tappan, afterwards senator from that state, was trying a case at Chillicothe, in which Tom Corwin, the great political stump speaker was one of the attorneys. Corwin, in the heat of the fray, was guilty of a breach of bad court etiquette, and Tappan fined him $50, which was a goodly sum in those days.

Corwin, who was really a great admirer and good friend of Tappan's, immediately began an humble apology to the court, and admitting his offense, said: "Your honor, I know you have a warm spot in your heart for me, and would be grieved to see me confined in the jail. I have not the money to pay the fine, and will have to be incarcerated for such time as your honor sees fit to give me, unless, indeed, moved by our many years of intimacy and friendship, your honor would kindly loan me the $50 with which to pay the fine."

A smile crept over Tappan's face, and turning to the clerk he said: "Mr. Clerk, remit that fine. The state of Ohio is better able to lose $50 than I am."

Another contempt story was told the writer by his father, who used to ride the circuit and practice before Judge Tappan; in fact, the first story came from the same good old "dad." A horse thief had been arrested down in Scioto county and was brought before Tappan for trial at the county seat, Portsmouth. Now a horse thief in those days was looked upon as worse than a murderer, and as they were hard to catch in those days before the telegraph, when one was caught his trial became a great event. As it happened, there was no jail, court being held in an old "tavern," and the old log stable being used as a jail.

The trial was concluded, the defendant found guilty, and the time for receiving sentence being at hand the prisoner had been brought in to get what was coming to him.

Now Tappan was like Ben Butler—not exactly cross-eyed, but not quite straightforward in his vision. Tappan gave the poor devil all that was coming to him, and also delivered a scathing lecture on the crime of horse stealing. This so pleased a big six-foot-six Kentuckian, who had come across the river to hear the trial, that he forgot himself and all at once blurted out: "That's right, old gimlet-eyes! Give him h—l, for he deserves it."

Tappan sent his "gimlet eyes" boring through the crowd and asked sharply: "Who was that?" The big Kentuckian got up and, as he stretched the kinks out of his anatomy, he answered: "This hyar old hoss," adding an oath.

A twinkle came in Tappan's corkscrew eyes, and, turning to the sheriff he nodded towards the still perpendicular corn-cracker and said: "Mr. Sheriff, you will kindly take that 'old hoss' and put him in the stable."

The street car strikers in Philadelphia won.

The lumbermen asking for a tariff on lumber "to protect American labor" is all right, perhaps, but how about the McCloud outfit, that has 800 Italians who are not even citizens, but are asking their government to make Uncle Sam pay because one of them got jabbed with an American bayonet?

Washington is to have an extra session of the legislature. This will take some of the swell out of the average clam-diggers' head.

PREPARING FOR THE GRAND LODGE OF KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

The Pythian order has become one of the strongest in the state, and has erected many beautiful lodge halls in the principal cities of Oregon and Idaho. A Pythian castle is under construction at Salem, the lot having been purchased, and plans for the building being in the hands of the committee.

Grand Lodge at Pendleton.

For the Knights of Pythias grand lodge, which is to convene in Pendleton June 22, the O. R. & N. Company has granted very favorable rates, according to L. R. Stinson, grand keeper of records and seal, Mr. Stinson, regarding the special rates, said:

The O. R. & N. Company will give a one and a third rate for the round trip to Pendleton for the grand lodge. But in addition to this the company will allow a 12-day stop-over privilege in Portland. This will permit those living south of Portland to attend the Seattle fair on their return from the grand lodge session. This favor will be especially appreciated by Pythians, because many wanted to be in Seattle early in July, when the great Iola rank team is there.

For the grand lodge session both Messrs. Moser and Stinson predict a big attendance. Many members of the order are anxious to attend a grand lodge session in Eastern Oregon, and they are looking with pleasure to the prospect of the session in Pendleton.

One of the most spectacular features of the grand lodge gathering will be the ceremonial session of Abd-Uhl Atif temple, Knights of the Khorassan. This is the social branch of the order, and membership in the same is open to all Pythians who are in good standing. It is hoped to have a class of at least 100 for the coming grand lodge.

BIG NEEDHAM RANCH

SOLD TO E. K. PIASECKI

470 ACRES PRUNE LAND

Another large sale has just been consummated, which means a great deal for the development of the fruit industry of this valley, and shows the high regard in which our fruit lands are held. The I. C. Needham ranch, consisting of 470 acres in the Rosedale prune section, has been disposed of to E. K. Piasecki, late of Grand Island, Nebraska. Mr. Piasecki and his mother will take possession right away, and get this year's crop in the deal. The Needham place has over 50 acres of prunes, and there is a fine crop on the trees at this writing. This is looked upon as one of the best prune orchards in that section, and that is saying a good deal. The new owners realize the great value of Salem prune lands, and propose to develop the whole place into vast prune orchards.

It is a fact that prune orchards in the Santa Clara valley of California, are selling for two and three times the price obtained hereabouts, and it is only a matter of time, and a short time at that, when the Salem orchards will bring as high prices as those of California, as they produce better paying crops. Shrewd investors are realizing this more and more every day, and while prune growers of the Rosedale section have made good money on their crops, their greatest harvest is still to be realized from the advance in prune lands.

This big deal was consummated by the C. O. Constable Land Co., who are making a specialty of the prune business. Mr. Constable is a practical prune grower himself, and is devoting most of his attention in the land business in that direction.
