Just Received

A new line of Hudson-Fulton Military Capes for girls, ages 8 to 12 years. They are navy blue, lined with bright red. High military collar of velvet trimmed with gold braid, two gold stars in the corner of the collar, trimmed with brass buttons. They are made just like the older people's capes which have been so much in demand this season. These are a very desirable wrap for school wear and we do not hesitate to recommend the quality. See them at the Ready-to-Wear section.

Other Fruits Shown. The Jones nursery of Salem, showed the Pineapple quince from 3-year-old trees. It is the most highly improved quince.

Charles Crocker showed White Plume celery four feet high.

There was a fine display of Winter Nellis pears, the best late keeping winter pear grown. It will keep until May.

There were all kinds of berries fresh off the bough on all the tables.

There were many displays of Salway peaches, three inches in diameter.

Pine Niagara, Delaware, Concord, and Sweetwater grapes were present in large numbers.

On the long tables were hundreds of plates of the finest yellow, red, green and dark crimson apples, and pears and quinces and peaches.

George L. Allen, the Lebanon peony and dahlia specialist, showed about 40 kinds of the latter.

Ruef Bros., the Salem florists, showed carnations, chrysanthemums ferns and palms. Among them was the famous new white Wm. Taft mum, also the Virginia Poehlman. They are the largest growers in the valley.

The first prize five boxes were produced by Zinn & Callaway, across the river from Albany. The river bottoms and bench lands along the river are peculiarly productive of fine apples—in color and size.

The biggest apples were the Red Cheeked Pippins, the Wolf River and the good old Yellow Bell Flower, of which there were many, many samples. It has the melting ice-cream quality, a mingling of wine and roses.

Valley Metropolis Jr. Wallace H. Struble has this in the November Sunset Magazine. He is a nephew of Congressman Struble of Iowa and secretary of the Albany Commercial club.

But what of this Albany in the present tense? It is not a 'new' city, with photographs of itself as a sagebrush plain yesterday and a sporty metropolis today. In many respects it has the characteristics of an elderly, well-grounded eastern municipality. In its years of development it has taken the things that fortune has lavished upon it and added thereto in the spirit of true thrift. It has cultivated the habits of friendliness among its people, and is absolutely democratic in its residential and social relations. It can be truthfully said of Albany that it is a community of friends in the highest and most neighborly sense. It boasts of no special aristocratic residence district—mansions and cottages are interwoven in delightful variety—the prosperous banker and the well-to-do merchant mingle in neighborly courtesy with the mechanic and the clerk.

Albany is a city of 7,000 people. It has thirty manufacturing establishments; four banks; twelve churches, a Presbyterian college; a Catholic academy; a $50,000 high school (new building); three graded public schools; a modern, well equipped hospital; a free public library; two telephone systems, with complete rural connections; electric light and power service; an electric street car system; railway lines radiating in six directions; a rapid transit electric railway under construction; it has twelve miles of cement sidewalks and extensions are being made to all parts of the city; it is engaged in paving many miles of its streets with bitulithic pavement; it has an unlimited supply of pre sanitary sewage system; water and electric power for manufactories; Albany is a dairying, stock and fruit center and the clearing house for the commerce of the central Willamette valley.

"The aggregate of all this seems exceptional, and yet the citizens of Albany, cognizant of the great richness of the city's tributary country, believe that they are just at the threshold of development. Thus, believing, they invite the newcoming citizens of greater Oregon to an alliance with them in building the second city of Oregon in the midst of the incomparable valley, whose hills and vales and singing streams are prophetic of prosperity to come, overmatching the abundance of today.

SPLENDID PROGRAM

Salem return visit. It was a happy effort in the way of a welcome.

Mayor Rodgers responded to the VanWinkle billiken smile with the Albany apple dumpling laugh. He complimented Albany on getting there with hard surface paving. He praised Wallace R. Struble on his splendid publicity work as secretary of the commercial club. Mayor Rodgers eulogized Albany as the Apple City of the West and the title has been fairly won. Prominent horticulturists discoursed on the possibilities of peach culture in the Willamette valley. There were hundreds of fine peaches displayed to show that this is a peach country.

The Salem Stalwart quartet was the musical attraction the second day of the fair. Friday was pioneers' day at the fair and there was a grand reunion of the old settlers and native sons and daughters of old Linn county.

Some Prominent Speakers. Aside from those mentioned on Saturday prominent speakers taking part in the apple fair were: Prof. A. L. Peck and Prof. A. B. Cordley of the State Agricultural college; W. K. Newell of Gaston, Tom Richardson of the Portland Commercial club, H. M. Williamson, of Portland, and others. On Friday evening there were addresses by Willis Dunsenway and Congressman Hawley of this city. The home-coming reception was held at the rooms of the Albo club and there was a musical and literary program at the First Christian church.

Gaining the Crowds. The dainty lunches set out by the Wood confectionery are winning their way to the hearts and stomachs of the people. Hot tamales and salads, coffee, with real cream, and other delicacies are served at very moderate prices. Mr. Wood gives personal attention to every detail of the service, and it is scrupulously neat and clean, and very inviting to family parties and young people.
