

THE RIGHT OF WAY SALEM

So many dramatized novels have fallen by the wayside in recent years that the success of "The Right of Way" which will be brought to the Grand Opera House next Monday night for one night stay, is gratifying; the more so because Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, from which Eugene W. Presbrey made the play, is an uncommonly fine one. The best points of this story of the redemption of a wasted life, by an act of self renunciation, with the hero standing in the predicament of love and happiness on one side and honor and responsibility on the other, have been well brought out by Mr. Presbrey, who had a hard problem to solve when he undertook to make a play that should reflect the novel as a psychological study and at the same time have plenty of action. In the first scene the cynical, reckless and tarnished personality of Charley Steele is thrown into bold relief in a series of encounters with the judge whom he has defrauded, the wife whom he has outraged, the murdered whom he has saved, the lover whom he defies and the drunken parson and boyish reprobate whom he has led to ruin. This swift sequence of incidents gives a strongly dramatic thrill and arouses interest that is held to the end. The dramatization is practically an original play, only 800 of the 16,000 words being taken direct from the book. P. Aug. Anderson, one of the best of our so-called "character actors" plays Joe Portugals notably well. In both dialect and make-up he is an ideal riverman. As for the Charley Steele of Hallett Thompson, it is the best of his stage portraits. He makes Steele's regeneration and ultimate return to a consciousness of his past life, as well as his heroic self-sacrifice, really impressive. The company as a whole is a good one, and the pictorial side of the production very beautiful, the scenes being Steele's den, the Cote Dorian, the hut on the mountain, and the very picturesque Valley of Cooling Springs. Seat sale starts Saturday at 9 a. m.
