The Effect of the New Florida Railroad.

February 1, 1910, witnessed the consummation of the greatest constructive work achieved by any one man in the history of the nation, and evidenced in a most striking way the triumph of Yankee genius in solving the great problem of exploiting American trade, carrying cargoes all over the earth—calling vessels and running trains in apparently impossible places. The development of a country follows in the wake of its railroads, civilization strides side by side with the gangs that lay the ties. This splendid route bridging the Florida Keys—each hundred miles of railway being accounted equal to a thousand miles by ship—is the greatest timesaver in transit that has yet been evolved.

The new railroad will do more than merely save time; it will solve what has been declared by Senator Root to be the twentieth century problem of the American nation—the acquisition of South American trade. The representatives of the South American republics made a trip to Cuba over this Florida East Coast railway and as they wheeled in comfort over the waters of the gulf, they realized that each one of the 21 republics of the southland had suddenly been brought thousands of miles nearer the United States.

Few people realize that Key West, the terminal point of the new road, is 400 miles nearer to Panama than New Orleans or Galveston. The great rail traffic of the Mississippi river is certain to converge in Florida, which hangs out like a Christmas stocking from the map of the United States. The use of that stocking is Key West, the terminal which brings the whole western coast of South America, the Orient and Australia into closer proximity to the markets of the United States. Bearing these facts in mind, Mr. Flagler has courageously pushed his operations through the jungle of Florida, opening a thoroughfare from one continent to the other in the process, and it might seem now almost as a side issue of this tremendous plan, promoting the development of the fairy state that he loves.—National Magazine.

"Faithful Scotch" No More.

The thousands who will visit Estes Park in the Colorado Rockies this summer will not see "Faithful Scotch," for this famous collyre of a famous master is no more. Scotch's master—or rather the friend and companion whom he worshiped—is Enoch A. Mills, known in this country and abroad as the guide to Long's Peak, nature student and enthusiastic government lecturer on forest preservation and author of "Wild Life on the Rockies"—of which one of the chapters not least interesting is devoted to the doings of "Faithful Scotch." The manner of the passing of Scotch is at once a pang and a consolation. Death by accident is always cruel because seemingly endless. But he died in doing what he thought was his duty. The sin of sins in a forest country is to leave fire, and the first duty of the man who finds fire in the forest is to put it out. Scotch knew this as well as any one—many an incontinent fire had he put out with his feet and many an alarm had he given. This spring Scotch paid a visit to the road menders, and as fate would have it, he arrived just at the moment when the men had taken shelter from a dynamite blast. His vigilant eye detected the smoke of the burning fuse. He barked the alarm and dashed to the spot. He arrived just as the blast exploded. He was struck in the head and chest. Death was instantaneous.

"LORD" SOMERSET IS NOT EVEN "NEAR-DUKE"

[UNTER PRESS LEARNED WIRE.]

London, July 26.—Henry Charles Somers Augustus Somerset, who called himself "Lord Somerset," is neither lord, duke nor near-duke, according to popular belief in London. Mrs. Adeline Hunter De Marie Somerset, daughter of Morton Craig Hunter, prominent socially in Kansas City and Independence, has filed suit for divorce against "Lord Somerset." Investigation in London fails to show who the defendant is. Society does not know the title "Lord Somerset," at least not within recent decades.

Comparative Advantages of Aviation.

Here is a glimpse of one of the beautiful places on the Southern Pacific Railroad. The trestle runs along the river bank for a considerable distance so that passengers seem to themselves to be speeding along over the very water. Aeroplaning will conceivably some day make such a sensation quite a commonplace, for one fancies that the routes adopted by regular aeroplane lines may very well lie along river courses to be out of the way of private property, buildings and trees, and yet keep near enough to the earth to make a quick landing if necessary. All the passengers could moreover be fitted with life preservers and the plane with water-tight wings. For if one really had to drop the water would be a pleasanter surface on which to fall than the land. Perhaps rescuing parties could patrol the watercourses, ready to be summoned by a C. Q. D. For when aeroplanes are perfected there is no reason why they should sink without an instant's warning any more than a ship does.

Aeroplaning need not necessarily mean choosing one's course as far above the earth as possible. Fancy the advantage of a freight line, for example, where no roadbed had to be laid and kept up, no ties and no track and no switchmen. Truly one begins already to feel as if we shall some day agree upon aviation as the only safe means of getting about, since it is the one that is least concerned with friction. When there is no question of building roads an indefinite number of routes for going and coming can be laid out, and thus all possibility of collision be avoided, for in passing above the earth signals and can be read by the aviator, where the mariner has to depend on his chart. Really the possibilities of aeroplaning loom large. But the end is not yet, and meantime we may examine with some interest the levathan-like structure in the picture as it drags its sinuous length apparently up out of the water.

How to Fight the Fly.

What are we going to do about it? Are we going to wake up to the fact that all this can and shall be stopped? With a full realization of what it means we should certainly take care of our own nuisances and see that our neighbor does the same. In hospitals and at home flies should be kept away from the sick, especially those ill with contagious diseases.

We should abolish open privies and properly dispose of our sewage and other waste products.

Our sanitary inspectors in cities should be instructed to first disinfect and then remove all exposed filth wherever found.

Stable manure should be thoroughly screened or kept in tight dark receptacles and removed at regular intervals.

Laws should be passed, in all our States, as they have been recently passed in several, requiring the thorough screening of all public kitchens, restaurants and dining-rooms. All food, particularly that which is eaten uncooked, exposed to sale during the fly season, should be screened. The same care should be taken with all food in the home. Dealers who allow their food products to be exposed to flies should be carefully avoided.

By rigorously following these precautions much can be done toward removing the conditions which breed the house-fly, thus helping materially in the extermination of one of the most dangerous pests in the world.

—From "The Disease-Carrying House Fly," by Daniel D. Jackson, in the American Review of Reviews for July.

A Gol on Wedding means that man and wife have lived to a good old age and consequently have kept healthy. The best way to keep healthy is to see that your liver does its duty 365 days out of 365. NO MORE GRAY HAIR
It is easier to preserve the color of the hair than to restore it, although it is possible to do both. Our grandmothers understood the secret. They made and used a "sage tea," and their dark, glossy hair long after middle life was due to this fact. Our mothers have gray hairs before they are fifty, but they are beginning to appreciate the wisdom of our grandmothers, and are fast following suit. The present generation has the advantage of the past in that it can get a ready-to-use preparation called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur. As a scalp tonic and color restorer, this preparation is vastly superior to the ordinary "sage tea" made by our grandmothers, and it can be bought for 50 cents and $1 a bottle at almost any first-class drug store, or will be sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.
