To the Editor:

Dear Sir,

The reports of the recent strike in the iron industry in Japan have been very alarming. The workers have demanded a wage increase of 20%, and the management has refused to grant it. The situation is very tense, and there is a risk of a general strike.

Yours truly,

THE LAST SLAVE GIRL IN OREGON

The morning was bright. The sky was clear, and the wind was gentle. The sun shone down on a small village nestled among the rolling hills. The children were playing outside, their laughter filling the air. At that moment, a figure emerged from the shadows. It was the last slave girl in Oregon. She was dressed in tattered clothing, her skin darkened by years of abuse. She approached the village, her eyes fixed on the homes and families she had been forbidden to see for so long. As she stepped closer, the children scattered, their faces filled with fear. The slave girl stood silently, her heart heavy with the weight of her past. She knew that her days as a slave were numbered, and she longed for a chance at freedom.

Mrs. Rachel Brooks arrived nearly 50, who came to save Slave Line in Oregon.

She brought her to the village and helped her integrate into the community. The last slave girl in Oregon found peace and happiness, her story a testament to the power of hope and resilience.
