SALEM'S MR. DOOLEY DISCUSSES BRIDGES AND POINTS OUT HOW THEY CAN BE BUILT

"Well," says my friend, Tommy Coffey, to-day, to hizzoner, the mare, the bridge bond election is over.

"All over," says Cousin Lou, "but the growlin'."

"Will there be growlin'," asks Tom?

"There will," says the mare. "They ain't in a town of this size. Salem," he says, "stands in a uneeck position in the world today," he says.

"In all ages," he says, "of the world's history, from time immemorial, down through the dark ages, and still further down," he says, "waxin' more ill-quint at ev'ry brith, 'even to our own time, there never has been a place to compare with it. It's ekil is un-known."

"Salem has," he says, "what might be called a triple-alliance of the graces, or," he says, "to be more explicit, our glorious city has three pints no other municipality can touch."

"These pints," he says, "are the number of dambloof residents within her borders, her unapproachable credit and the fact that she is the only city on earth without newspaper riplintation of some sort."

"To elucidate me position," he says, "I will first take up pint wan. Salem is full of them mossbackers who want nawthin' but to be let alone in their ignorance," he says.

"I have only an opportunity now and this to vote down some measure that would help to make them rich."

"First," he says, "they petishun me as their honorable and ondlign-need leader to build thin some bridges." "Done," says I, "but I need a couple of dollars to get the raw material with."

"Not from us, they say," he says, "they're not all that way though. Now there's Frank D. Where-are-ye of the Hill Diggers Mutual Blinit Society. While Frank," he says, "be in a good swimmer, never uses bridges himself, still he is perfectly willin' that the others may have thin if they have attained the bridge habit. So Frank votes the ticket straight."

"Then," he says, "there is Frank Deaborn, me able an accomplished loudint and honory counsel of the Hop Growers' Five and Drum Corps. For days," he says, "prior to the election, the loot was workin', writin' letters and attempin' to speak on the subject of bridge bonds and their re-lashun to the body politic. Take," he says, "the masterly way he explained to Erny Answerwerson about the question of six per cent bonds."

"Frank Answerwerson," he says, "the question of finance is a deeply intricate wan, and wan which I doubt if you will be able to understand in your ignorance," he says, "but I will try to bate it into wer head just the same. Ye ast why we made the interst on the bonds six per cent instead of five. Anny man," he says, "with a grain of sense knows," he says, "that six per cent is more than five, hence the difference of wan par cent ad volarum."

"Next," says the mare, "taking up question two, I will call yer attinshun to our credit. On takin' up the reins of government," he says, "I found the finances of the city in a deplorable condition. The banks of the country were closed against us. The only place," he says, "where any accommodations could be had after midnight was at the Mary Ann. But now what is the situation we find today. Under me own," he says, "and the Loots' careful guidance, aided and abetted by that noble student of finance, F. South Dakota Lafcalrsk, we find ourselves," he says, "in a better standing thin any other city in the world."

"With an assessed valuation of something over $1,000,000, we have a total bonded indebtedness of something less thin wan half of wan par cent less thin nawthin'," he says, "and the bond barons of the world kept off from worryin' us to death, only and solely because we have no bridges wherely and wher-at they might get at us," he says.

"Havin' passed by numbers wan and two we will next take up the third question which," he says, "is number three. This," he says, "touches on the most uneeck fase of the life of the city, a city," he says, "which I am assured on the reliable authority of my friend, the Kink of Kinkwood Park," he says, "will have a populashun of 50,000 in 1915 and which is absolutely ignorant and in-nercent of any thing in the forum of a newspaper published within its borders. Nevertheless," he says, "with all this handicap we have managed to work up considerable interest in municipal affairs and before the close of the present year," he says, "I hope to announce to the world through the medium of the real estate and the Board of Trade," he says, "that we and the Loot has over 1,000,000 linyel feet of sewer and street work in course of contract-shun. This," he says, "of course di-vids on wither or naw the digges workin' for the Wornout Construct-shun Company, the El Roseahov Development League and the Min-t-born and Flashin'-the-pan Rock and Rye Crushing Company," he says, "are injuced to go on a strike, in which case," he says, "it will be necessary for me to take a hand and turn the whole amount of contract work over to Walter Poo and his gang of mixers."

"If I was a litrey man," says Tom, "I'd rint wan of Elyl's pressos and start a paper. They's a field here for wan and thin we git the bridges."

PORTLAND TO INVESTIGATE THE POLICE

Following the exposure of evidence, which strongly indicates that there is a graft ring in the Portland police department, District Attorney Cameron intimated today that the grand jury, which has been summoned to meet August 21, will investigate the department.
