

THE COOPER BROTHERS' BIG SHOW IS NEXT SATURDAY WILL HAVE FINE SEND-OFF

An Entirely New Industry in the Made in Oregon Class, and One of the Greatest Aggregations of Horsemen and Horsewomen, Bronchos and Broncho Busters, Daring Cowboy Tricks, Fancy Rope Throwing, and in Fact, Everything That Goes to Make a First-class Wild West Show--Its Initial Performance Here Should Be Greeted With a Packed Tent.

When Cooper Bros. Great Wild West show appears in this city, next Saturday, April 20, it will prove its claim to the title of the best, most compact and comprehensive exhibition of expert skill in horsemanship, rope throwing, broncho busting and all-around reproduction of the best and gamiest of all wild western pranks and sports in this country today to the complete satisfaction of the most sanguine of doubters. This wonderful aggregation of the world's most celebrated stars of the western arena has been brought together by Cooper Bros. at an enormous outlay of money and they comprise, as has been truly said by the press of the country, the "cream of the world's tented stage." Headed by Arena Director A. A. West who is the acknowledged "Peer of all Cowboys," and who for years was one of Buffalo Bill's chief attractions in his wild west show as a broncho buster and rough and trick rider of world renown, this great organization of ardent wonders embraces Mr. L. E. McCoy, the champion steer bullfighter of the world, who actually tackles a wild and furious steer, and throws him with his teeth in the brief space of thirty seconds (the only man in the world who bulldozes a steer with his teeth); Homer Edwards, better known by his range sobriquet "Cactus Kid," who holds the championship of the west as rough horse rider, and who has given exhibitions all over the country and carried away all grand prizes; Mr. and Mrs. (Winfield and Mills) Mace, champion duo rough horse and fancy and trick riders, Mrs. Mace being the only lady in wild west shows, who rides "straight up" and without hobble stirrups; Cuba Crutchfield, the Cherokee cowboy, who challenges the world in feats of skill in fancy and trick rope throwing; and Miss Minnie Richardson, champion cowgirl of the west, in extraordinary deeds of daring in rough and fancy riding.

MAY ROBSON.

May Robson has achieved the unusual distinction of being the best delineator of eccentric women having a quaint humor. It has been stated and the statement frequently repeated, that women in general have no keen sense of humor. Miss Robson is assuredly a living contradiction to this assertion. May Robson is an actress of exquisite pose, enunciation clear and distinct, and her transitions from touching pathos to joviality is a revelation. In the new play, "A Night Out," she will appear in the character of a good natured, but eccentric old lady who is held in great esteem by her two grandsons, since she simply dotes on them and enters into their love troubles, acting as a sort of a guardian; therefore, she easily persuades the boys to take her to a fashionable restaurant in New York. She is entirely innocent of the character of the place, and is enjoying the novelty of the surroundings, when the police raid the place. "Grannum" and the boys are hustled into the street by Mitza, the dancing girl, and a policeman, whom Grannum has bribed. Arriving home they find the doors locked and the lights out. The boys overcome this by climbing up the ivy and assisting Grannum through the window. Her hat is crushed, jacket torn, appearance generally not of the very best. The complications arising from this early morning return forms the basis of the humor and ludicrous situations. The character of "Grannum" affords Miss Robson full opportunity for her natural gifts in the portrayal of eccentric characters, in which the expressions of pathos and humor are alternately and naturally expressed. Miss Robson will appear at the Grand, April 20, supported by Jack Storey, Paul Decker, Lewis E. Parmenter, John Rowe, Geo. Hall, Faye Cusick, Edith Conrad, Margaret Boland and Louise Rand.
