WILD WEST SHOW

COOPER BROS. GREAT WILD WEST SHOW ORGANIZED HERE IN SALEM TO GIVE INITIAL PERFORMANCE TO SALEM 'TWO-PLE SATURDAY.

Never before in the history of wild west shows has there been assembled together in one big troupe so many star performers in their individual and characteristic specialties of rough, fancy and trick horseman ship, rope throwing, steer bulldogging, sharpshooting and "wild and woolly" western games, sports and trials and tribulations of early frontier life, as will be seen under one big tent when Cooper Bros. Great Wild West show comes to this city on Saturday April 20th. This wonderful aggregation of star attractions of the world's arena has been brought together at an enormous financial outlay and no expense has been spared by Cooper Bros. to bring their thrilling and exciting spectacular extravaganza to such a high degree of artistic perfection that it is far beyond the approach of anything in its class ever introduced before an American public.

This marvelous wild west performance will be under the sole direction of Mr. A. A. West, the "Peer of Cowboys," for many years the star attraction of Buffalo Bill's Wild West shows and celebrated rough, fancy and trick horse rider and he will be supported by such renowned experts in their craft as Mr. L. E. McCoy, the only man in the world who "bulldogs" (throws) a wild and mad'y racing steer with his teeth; Homer Edwards, "Cactus Kid" of the rangers, champion rough horse rider of the west; Mr. and Mrs. Mace, the duo champions in rough and fancy horse riding, rope throwing, etc., (Mrs. Mace being the only lady rider in wild west shows who rides "straight up" and without hobble stirrups); Cuba Crutchfield, world's champion and challenger rope-thrower and rope-juggler, who has given prize exhibitions throughout the country and has never met his equal; Miss Mianie Richardson woman champion rough and fancy rider and rope thrower, and many others including a great troupe of genuine cowboys, cowgirls, scouts, Indian warriors and squaws, in warpaint and garb of early days, who will reenact exciting, blood-curdling and realistic scenes of early life and hardships on the western plains, as well as amusing and thrilling frontier games and sports.

Remember, there is only one wild west show—Cooper Bros.—and do not forget the date. Two performances, afternoon and evening, at 2 and 8 p. m. Two outside free attractions, at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. at the show grounds, and Cowboy band street parade at 10 a. m.

TRYING TO WRITE AFTER BEING DEAD FOR YEARS

New York, April 15.—That the spirit of the dead novelist, Frank R. Stockton, who died in 1902, is trying to continue its literary work through the medium of Miss Etta DeCamp of this city, is the remarkable claim made today by James H. Hyslop, head of the American Society for Psychical Research. Hyslop and a professional medium are working with Miss DeCamp, and the result of their investigations will soon be published.

Dr. John Wesley Hill says he would gladly give his life to see Taft re-nominated and elected. The horse editor realizes the Rev. gentleman is on the political rostrum instead of in his pulpit, and hence puts some salt on the tail of Dr. Hill's statement, just to make it palatable. If there was any way to test the matter, the horse editor would risk a quarter or two on the gentleman reconsidering his statement.

CONTRACT FOR PAVING IN BOISE

E. W. Geiger, of the Geiger Construction Co., left yesterday for Boise, Idaho, where he went in response to notice that his company had been awarded the contract to lay six miles of sewer, the contract price being $52,000. Mr. Geiger just returned from a trip to Eugene and other points in Southern Oregon in the interests of his company. The Geiger Construction Co. did the cement pavement on east Court street and 24th street and has the contract for paving Center street from Liberty to 14th street. This work will be in charge of Mr. Irving K. Humboldt during Mr. Geiger's absence from the city and it is the intention to start work on that improvement the last of this week. Mr. Geiger is enthusiastic over the prospects of the west and is well pleased with its prospects. While he will give some attention to the work in Salem, his attention for the immediate future will be directed mainly toward the work at Boise and Eugene.

State Candidate in Town.

County Clerk Field, of Portland, who is a candidate for secretary of state, was in the city today and yesterday. He closes his campaign by a tour of the West Side cities. Mr. Field says he has engaged in no personalities and has made a clean campaign and will heartily support the nominee, although he confesses to a dislike to become a Salem resident.

Will Mr. Bourne Come Back?

The term of Jonathan Bourne, Jr., senior senator from Oregon, will expire March 3, 1913. Notwithstanding this fact, he is on the job in Washington, has been on the job for the last 16 months, with the exception of one week's holiday, and will remain on the job, attending to his official duties, undisturbed by the impending election. He is, however, a candidate for another term in the senate, and his method of making no campaign for re-election is unique and without precedent in the popular-government movement. To the people of Oregon, Senator Bourne puts the novel issue frankly.

"It is up to you," he says to the citizens of his state, "to demonstrate whether you have the intelligence to recognize and appreciate good public service by retaining public servants who make good, or whether you prefer to return to the old campaign system—use of money, character assassination, personal contracts, sophistry, misleading statements and skillful straddling of leading questions."

That this "may sound egotistical" the senator acknowledges, but he insists that his desire is to see how the people will avail themselves "of this opportunity of self-expression." He believes that it is a common-sense business proposition which the voters must determine for themselves. When his term expires the government will have expended $50,000 in his training for the office of United States senator. Has this money been well expended?—that is the question as Senator Bourne views it; or, in his own words: "In business, demonstrated efficiency is the sole measure of retention or promotion of the employee. Thus it should be in government. I am giving you the opportunity of demonstrating that in Oregon such is the case."

Under the Oregon law, the candidate may designate 12 words to be printed after his name on the official ballot. Senator Bourne has selected this as the principal plank in his platform: "Advocates substitution of general welfare for selfish interest in all government operations."

Jonathan Bourne has been a useful senator, representative of his state, which he has widely advertised throughout the country. His greatest service to the "general welfare" has been his initiative of the presidential primary. He originated the idea, secured its adoption by the legislature of Oregon in 1910, and has vocated the extension of this primary to other states by speech, pamphlet and letter. The result of this unceasing labor for popular government has been the enactment of presidential primary laws in Nebraska, Wisconsin, North Dakota, New Jersey, California, and more recently in Michigan and Massachusetts. He will never let up until this shall become the sole method of selecting candidates for the presidency.

He has exposed the misuse of federal patronage. His speech in the senate on this subject broke all records for the "best sellers"—over a million copies were requested in 90 days. As chairman of the committee on postoffices and post roads he has pulled a strong oar in congress for the parcels post. His present campaign—of making no campaign for re-election—is decidedly the interesting event of the year. And the result, if favorable to his candidacy, must necessarily have an important influence in other states and upon officials high and low. Sticking to the job may become necessary, if not popular, with public servants from the titular head down to the gentleman from Arizona.
