Newsboys of Salem Are Dined

Seventy Five of Them Diner Guests of the Journal--Manager Davenport Takes Them All to the Globe

There were, no doubt, thousands of pleasant family gatherings and reunions yesterday; thousands of others of those delightful little home affairs where some especial friend or friends, some well-liked neighbor or family surrounded the Thanksgiving table and joined in making the occasion a memorable one for all. But of all these thousands of gatherings, it is doubtful if there was one that equalled and certainly none that exceeded in genuine hearty enjoyment, that at the Marion hotel yesterday afternoon, when all the newsboys of the city put their feet under the big long table in the dining room as guests of The Capital Journal, and took dinner with the paper's owners and managers.

Shortly after noon the little fellows, each of whom had been given a ticket by the route manager, Mr. McInturff, to whom was delegated the job of "herding them," gathered at the Capital Journal office, where they made things forget their lonesomeness and shortly after 1 o'clock Mr. McInturff began his job of herding, and showed real genius.

He got them started out in couples and they marched down the sidewalk until all were out, and then two by two, as the animals entered the ark, they led across the street and into the dining room. They were soon seated, with Mr. Taber at the head of the table, and the way they individually and collectively stowed away the turkey and other good things the table was loaded with was certainly a great compliment to both caterers and cooks. There was about 75 of them, and they all talked between mouthfuls and all at once and it surely was a whole show and an enjoyable one in itself.

A Few Details.

That every youngster in attendance can boast of eating the largest and one of the best dinners he ever tackled, goes without saying. The seventy-five plates, every one managed by a bright-eyed, hungry boy, were filled to overflowing time after time. Waitresses and waiters were kept constantly busy replenishing the platters and the orders of the day were to "fill 'em up till they can't eat another bite." These orders were carried out to the letter too, as when those lads left the banquet board, they were content to either sit or lounge upon any convenient chair or table in the Journal office instead of romping and playing out-of-doors.

Every one was in the highest of spirits, especially Mr. Taber, who officiated at the dinner. He declared that it afforded him more pleasure to sit and witness the seventy-five boys, each with a boy's appetite, and all healthy and bright, dig into the fine things set before them than anything in his experience.

Mr. McInturff Talks

As they began to show signs of quitting, Mr. McInturff made them a little talk about as follows:

"Well, boys, have you all had enough to eat? Aren't you glad that you work for a company that remembers you on Thanksgiving day, especially at noon time, as well as when there are papers to be sold and delivered? And we have a selfish motive in doing it because it makes us happy to see you so happy, makes us glad to see you too full for afternoon.

Now while I have been giving out tickets to this affair so freely, there is one here with us today who planned the whole show from start to finish. He has done it because he remembers the time when he was a boy like the rest of you, when the conquest of a drum bone and a pumpkin pie was the height of his ambition.

Some of you boys have not had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Taber personally and I take great pleasure in introducing him to you. Mr. Taber, the News Boys."

The Boys Talk too.

"I want to tell you, Mr. Warden," he said, "that that music last night

About 200 geese, 100 ducks and 500 chickens were disposed of to residents of the Capital City to make up the Thanksgiving dinner of its citizens, making a grand total of 1500 birds consumed yeesterday.

There are practically no birds left on the market this morning.

Hangings to Occur as Stated

Law Is Plain about Reprieves and the only Thing That can Interfere with the stunt Is the Governor Himself

Clerk of the Supreme Court J. C. Moreland smiles when the investigation which Attorney-General Crawford has started into the legality of the hangings scheduled at the pen on Friday, December 13 is mentioned. The judge defines the term "reprieve" and quotes statutes and opinions by the armful to show that there is absolutely nothing irregular to stand in the way of the program being carried out as booked on that day.

Before looking into the matter the attorney-general made the off-hand statement that it might be necessary for all of the condemned men to be sent back to the counties from which they came and have new dates set for their executions.

The attorney-general has stated that apparently the courts of Oregon and of other states have held that in cases where the death penalty is not carried out on the date originally set it is not necessary for the court to re-sentence the prisoners, but that it is necessary for the court to set new dates for the executions.

Attorney-General Crawford has also expressed doubt as to the legality of the governor's action in naming the day upon which the hangings shall take place, believing this to be in the province of the judiciary. While the constitution gives the governor power to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons it does not state when reprieves shall terminate. Judge Moreland, however, shows how it is unnecessary for the constitution to make such a provision since the definition of a reprieve carries with it as a part of the reprieve the making of a certain date on which the execution or other penalty shall be inflicted.

Quoting from the New York reports "I am of the opinion that in a case like the present where the execution of sentences is reprieved by the governor until a particular day, it is the duty of the sheriff to execute the judgment of the court at that time, unless further respite has been granted or the judgment annulled in the meantime."

"The governor under the constitution is vested with the prerogative to grant reprieves. This is a power to enlarge and extend the time fixed by the court for the execution of the sentence of death to a day certain in the future. The right to execute the sentence on that day inheres in the power to fix the day to which the reprieve shall extend."

Dropped Dead as He Entered Grand Stand

University of Washington, Seattle, Nov. 29.--Marshall Peterson, a son of Marshall W. Peterson, cashier of the Dexter Horton bank, dropped dead from acute heart failure, as he entered the grand stand before the Washington-Pullman game yesterday.

Peterson and his father had hurried from the car line to the football field and the over-excitement and excitement proved too much for his weak heart. There was a crowd trying to enter the grand stand and he had to struggle through the Washington yell as he climbed the stand steps.

Dr. D. C. Hall, physical director at Peterson's university, was called and young Peterson was carried under the grand stand, but he was already dead. Dr. Hall stated that a weak heart and over excitement was the cause.

The Marion Certainly Filled 'Em

MANAGER CROWE ENJOYED THE NEWSBOYS' DINNER AND HERE IS A FEW OF THE GOOD THINGS HE GAVE THEM.

That the average healthy boy can overcome the amount of food consumed by the ordinary grown man or woman was conclusively manifested yesterday afternoon at the banquet given by The Capital Journal to the newsboys.

Figures will not lie, according to John E. Crowe, manager of the Hotel Marion, where the big dinner was held, and they are as follows:

- Turkey, 120 pounds.
- Cranberries (sauce) 4 gallons.
- Potatoes (sweet) 2 bushels.
- Mince pie, 22.
- Plum pudding, 20 pounds.
- Ice cream, 5 gallons.

In connection with this comparatively enormous amount of food consumed by the seventy-five lads at the dinner, Manager Crowe served quart after quart of olives, pickles, peaches and other fancy canned goods together with tropical fruits of every description.

"In compiling the necessary items for a modern banquet," said Mr. Crowe today, "I would have made my tentative plans no more complete and, in fact, would have figured upon a lesser supply than that required by the newsboys. Those boys ate more than I would have served to 100 grown people and for a time it was doubtful if we would be able to keep sufficient turkey on hand for others."

Truly, Mr. Crowe did himself proud in serving his small guests yesterday and proved himself worthy of the title "One Jolly Good Fellow."

[UNITED PRESS LEASED WIRE.]

Portland, Ore., Nov. 29.--Seven men were indicted by the county grand jury today as a result of the investigation by juvenile court authorities of acts of depravity practiced among a clique of local men and in which a score of boys are involved also. Up to date approximately 40 arrests have been made by juvenile court officials in connection with the investigation. More than half of those taken into custody were above the age of 21. State Will Do Its own Insuring

Governor West may recommend to the state legislature the appointment of an appraiser to estimate the cost of insuring the buildings belonging to the state, and the appropriation of three-fourths of that amount as an insurance fund, to be carried by the state.

In answer to an expressed opinion of Attorney-General Crawford that the state should insure with insurance companies, and not attempt to carry its own insurance, the governor today stated that the losses at any one of the state institutions could not equal the amount in premiums paid, should the state insure with companies.
