War Cloud Darkens In Europe

Looking as though no agreement would be reached—War seems certain over the division of Turkey.

London, Dec. 1—While Turkey and the Allies fail to attain the kind of understanding that would lead to the formation of a Soviet power in the Middle East, the European situation is growing more critical daily.

The grave situation is due to the failure of the French and British to reach an understanding over the division of Turkey.

The French and British officials met in Paris last week to discuss the question of the division of Turkey.

The French, however, were unwilling to accept the Allied demand for the partition of Turkey into four zones.

The French government, in its decision to withdraw from the negotiations, announced that it was unwilling to accept the Allied demand for the partition of Turkey into four zones.

The Allies, on the other hand, were determined to press for the partition of Turkey into four zones.

The situation is further complicated by the fact that the Allies are also divided on the question of the division of Turkey.

The British, for example, are more willing to accept the Allied demand for the partition of Turkey into four zones.

The French, on the other hand, are more inclined to accept the Allied demand for the partition of Turkey into four zones.

The situation is further complicated by the fact that the Allies are also divided on the question of the division of Turkey.

The British, for example, are more willing to accept the Allied demand for the partition of Turkey into four zones.

The French, on the other hand, are more inclined to accept the Allied demand for the partition of Turkey into four zones.