SPENDS MORE MONEY THAN ANY OTHER MAN

Representative Fitzgerald Does This—Is Chairman of Congressional Ways and Means Committee.

Washington, June 13.—Representative Fitzgerald of New York probably spends more money than any other man in the world. And he isn't a spendthrift either. On the other hand, there are some who will tell you that he's the tightest tightwad who ever strangled the eagle on a silver dollar. As chairman of the powerful ways and means committee he theoretically handles every cent Uncle Sam spends. There are continually some thousands of people trying to tell him how to spend the money and that makes it hard for him. He told some of his troubles today.

"Being chairman of this committee requires infinite guile," said Representative Fitzgerald. "Some congressmen and department officials stay awake nights thinking up things to slip over. Shortly after I took the job, Director Holmes of the bureau of mines came dashing into my office. 'Good morning, I've got to have $250,000 quick. We're going to be thrown into the street in Pittsburgh because the war department which formerly occupied the buildings there wants them again.' And Holmes was going to be 'thrown out' in the hope of getting a quarter of a million for other quarters. He didn't get it and he wasn't thrown out."

"Another little instance was when the civil service commission insisted on having $11,000 to buy steel files to keep 'valuable records' in. Inquiry developed the fact that the 'valuable records' were the examination papers of everyone who has ever been in the service, from janitors and charwomen up. My argument against the appropriation was that the best thing that could happen was to have the commission's file cleaned out by having those alleged 'valuable' records burned up at the earliest opportunity. There's little hope of that, however, for the commission is housed in a fireproof building. In spite of the wooden files, the 'valuable' records are still intact. Also, I might add that Uncle Sam did not waste that $11,000."

"It was the same when Ex-President Taft's economy commission came to us for $500,000 the first and $250,000 the second year, to determine just what course it would take in effecting future government economy. Goodness knows what they would have wanted after they had spent $750,000 learning what they wanted to do."

SEVERAL BIG CHANGES IN REFUND CONTEST

Baptist Women's Club in Second Place and Modern Woodmen Are Now in Sixth.

Great activity was shown yesterday by the contestants in The Capital Journal's Refund Contest. The Baptist Women's club jumped to second place and forced the Ladies of the U. A. R. back to third. Silver Bell Circle gained heavily and the Modern Woodmen of America made a wonderful gain. The standing of the contestants today follows:

JULIUS CAESAR NAYPHE OF ATHENS, GREECE

Mr. Nayphe, who is a graduate of Oxford university, has been in America three seasons on lecture tours. He has caught the American love for a good story. Mr. Nayphe tells the following story and to most of us it will be a new one: "A man who was giving a nice little dinner at his home to some of his friends had the humiliation to see the negro waiter fall just as he was bringing the dish which contained the turkey as the main 'piece de resistance.' He was, however, equal to the occasion, turning to the men gathered about the table and saying: 'Gentlemen, here we behold an international catastrophe. You have just witnessed the downfall of Turkey, the overflow of Greece, the destruction of China and humiliation of Africa.'"

WAR IS ON OVER BUTTERFLY DISCOVERY

Head of Museum Says Dr. Schmidt and Not Nobleman Has Honor, Despite Latter's Claims.

BY KARL H. VON WIEGAND.
Staff Correspondent of the United Press.

Budapest, June 13.—A veritable cyclone in a coffee pot which has received almost as much attention as the Serbian incident and the Albanian affair has broken out between Baron Charles Rothschild of London and the Hungarian national museum officials in Budapest. Prestige is at stake over who discovered a "varovius melanargia jaygia." In United States talk that means a new kind of butterfly.

Baron Rothschild is famous for two things—money and fleas. He inherited the former but acquired the latter. Collecting fleas of the rare variety is an expensive hobby. One must be unusually fond of a collection of fleas to have spent as much money on them as the Baron has.

Belonging to a family which is credited with having the greatest collection of gold in the world, the Baron evidently was anxious to have what most people have not and few want—the greatest collection of fleas in the world. So he set out and today he has in his London palace a really remarkable collection of fleas. Recently he sent an expedition into the Arctic sea to get some live fleas from Polar bears. Having nothing more to conquer in that line, the Baron turned to chasing the elusive flea and has gone to strong for butterfly. And there began his trouble with the national museum of Hungary.

Baron Rothschild is married to the daughter of a wealthy Austrian landowner, Alfred von Wertheimstein. Recently the Baron and his wife came to visit his father-in-law at Grosvenor in Hungary. Always on the lookout for butterflies, the Baron made the acquaintance of several officials of the national museum. Among these acquaintances was the famous Hungarian naturalist, Dr. Anton Schmidt.

Schmidt, honored by the acquaintance of a Rothschild, confided to the Baron that he had discovered an entirely new species of butterfly—the "varovius melanargia jaygia"—on the Austrian emperor's domain near Pestor. Rothschild was as delighted as a child to learn of the new species and very anxious to get a specimen.

Baron Claims Honor.
Soon after Rothschild's return to London, the officials of the national Hungarian museum were amazed and much chagrined to read an article in the London Stymologist, written by the Baron, in which the writer told of his discovery of a new butterfly, hitherto unknown in Europe. The Baron made no mention of Dr. Schmidt. He claimed all the credit for the discovery. The head of the museum wrote a letter declaring that the butterfly was not discovered by the Baron but by Dr. Schmidt.

Recently Dr. Schmidt attempted to go on the Crown domains at Pestor. He was ordered off. Schmidt learned that, thanks to his excellent connections at Vienna, Baron Rothschild had secured exclusive rights for "butterfly hunting" on the Crown domains. He also learned that the Baron had presented numerous specimens of the "varovius melanargia jaygia," of which he claimed to be the discoverer, to the Vienna and London museums.

The museum officials appealed to the Hungarian ministry and the latter in turn to the domain authorities at Vienna. The reply accused Dr. Schmidt of trying to rob Baron Rothschild of the credit for the discovery of the butterfly. The newspapers actually took the matter up and ran editorials at great length for and against the Baron. And through the whole controversy there wasn't a hint of the killing humor of the picture presented of a Baron wealthy enough to buy several European kingdoms squabbling with a naturalist over the discovery of a short-lived butterfly. Finally, the ministry of education of Hungary and the museum brought action against the domain administrators and the two friendly domain officials were defeated. Dr. Schmidt was duly accredited with having discovered the "varovius melanargia jaygia" and he was granted permission to hunt butterflies all over Pestor.

Baron Rothschild, it is claimed, will not admit defeat. He still insists he discovered the "varovius melanargia jaygia." He is quoted as saying that he would rather be the discoverer of a rare specimen than be of benefit to any branch of science—such as a seldom-found flea or a butterfly but little known—than to make a millions on the Paris Bourse. Maybe he feels that way, but it's very doubtful if the majority of American citizens would prefer rare butterflies or fleas to negotiable coin of the realm.

JOBS AT $6000 A YEAR FAIL TO ATTRACT MEN

Uncle Sam Finding Difficulty in Getting Big Enough Persons for Railroad Valuation Work.

Washington, June 13.—Civil jobs at $6,000 a year. It's rather an attractive bait for Uncle Sam to dangle before the citizens in these days of high living and high cost of living.

But there isn't any stampede today for these particular high-salaried jobs. In fact, there are more than enough jobs for the available supply of men. Highways and byways today are being scraped by the government in a desperate effort to secure men enough to fill the positions. The biggest "man hunt" in the history of the government is in progress to find men, with the big salary as a bait, who are big enough to hold down the $6,000 jobs and earn the fat salaries.

Making physical valuation of railroads and other common carriers is the mammoth task for which the big federal salaries are offered. The interstate commerce commission is calling and sorting men in an effort to find the right ones for the right places in the biggest work undertaken by the government since the Panama canal was started. The government is handicapped by hard-fact civil service rules in its search for competent men.

The special engineering board of five men appointed by the interstate commerce commission to have the physical valuation job has charge of selection of the corps. Today the board is framing details to secure the necessary force of skilled engineers, expert draughtsmen, accountants, surveyors, roadmen and other technical assistants.

President Wilson is demanding that the civil service rules be strictly observed in selecting the physical valuation employees. He let down the bars only far enough for the five engineers of the governing board. These five men will devote all of their time to the valuation work. Their salaries are secret, but are said to be $10,000 a year each—about one-half or one-third of what they have been receiving in private practice. All are experts. They accepted the appointments from the interstate commerce commission because of patriotic desire to serve the government in the big work, also for the personal advertising that will accrue.

The engineers have requested the civil service commission to frame a new set of examinations for the special employees required for the valuation work. They have asked the commission to increase the entrance salaries to $5,000 for the higher grades of engineers demanded—men who can inspect a railroad track and tell how much per mile it costs to build—and other employees ranging from $5,000 down to $900.

The physical valuation engineers believe they can secure the necessary men if the examinations are not made too stiff and if large enough salaries are offered. They are asking the commission, in the civil service examinations, to allow applicants a "weight" of 50 per cent for experience, a large per cent for collegiate work and the remainder along the usual examination lines. They want a premium placed, however, upon actual engineering experience. They want tried, proven men. Applicants with all theory and little experience have small chance of being selected for the work. Those with no experience have no chance at all.

There will be no sinecures in the physical valuation service. But it offers one of the greatest, if not the greatest, opportunity in the government service in years; also it promises life employment, although congress prescribed that the valuation work must be completed within five years. Continual re-valuations and new valuations, keeping all data right up to date, is expected to make the physical valuation bureau a permanent fixture under the interstate commerce commission.

Three separate and distinct valuations of common carriers' property must be made by the physical valuation board. One must show the original cost of construction, another the "reproduction" cost—the cost of replacing, brand new, all railroads now in existence. Another valuation must show the value of the railroads as "going concerns." Every foot of railroad track in the country must be gone over by the commission. "Screaks of rust" and up-to-date systems must be appraised alike.

In addition to the railroads, property of 25,000 telephone companies in the United States must be appraised, as well as property of all other common carriers. All of this information will be the basis for rate changes by the interstate commerce commission. Instead of guessing at fair rates, the commission proposes to have exact, expert, detailed information upon which to base the revenues of railroads in calculating rates which will give fair, reasonable returns to the carriers.
