BAKER'S HOME RUN FEATURE

Makes Good Again in World's Series and Brings Victory to Macks--Marquard Hit Hard, Crandall Replaces Him and Tesreau Finishes Game--Number of Hits Equally Divided, But Philadelphia's Are More Effective--Enormous Crowd Sees Contest.

BY HAL SHERIDAN.

[UNITED PRESS LEASED WIRE.]

Polo Grounds, New York, Oct. 7.—"Home Run" Baker, the Trappe, Md., boy, made good again today with the usual result. The Athletics beat the Giants in the opening game of the 1913 world's series by a score of 6 to 4.

History not only seems to repeat itself with Baker and the Giants—it fairly stutters. Mack's mighty swatter, chief factor in the Athletics' victory of 1911, and the man who is credited with doing more damage to McGraw's championship hopes in recent years than any other individual, poked a home run into the right field bleachers in the fifth stanza of this afternoon's game, and the result is that the Philadelphians are one up on the Giants at the first snowdown.

Mackmen's Hits Count.

While the box score shows each of the contestants credited with eleven hits, the difference in the scoring is more readily accounted for when it is remembered that of the safe connections by the Mackmen, two were for doubles, two for triples, while another was a round-up. Three Giant slabsmen swayed the hole of Athletic-killers, Marquard, Crandall and Tesreau being scouted out in order. But of the three, only the latter escaped with cuticle intact. On the other hand, Bender, the veteran Indian, minstrel of Mack's delivery counter, went the full distance, and while he was touched up rather freely by the Giant men, breezed in at the finish with something to spare.

Marquard Retired.

Marquard's finish was forced in the fourth inning when Collins opened with a smashing triple and Baker, Barry and Schang added to the gaiety with a single, a double and triple in order. Crandall made a splendid start in the sixth, after Baker's home run in the fifth had sent Rube to the bench, and again in the seventh retired the side in order, but in the eighth frame the Mackmen got to him, when Collins, in his third accredited time at bat, started the inning with his third hit of the game, and Baker and Melnes followed with a single and double.

The official paid attendance at today's game was 6291 and the receipts, $75,255.50. The play by innings:
