GLASSY SHOW GIVEN BEFORE LOCAL ELKS

The classiest of classy character entertainments was given at the Elks' home last night, when the members congregated in regular meeting. The H. P. O. E. had what is generally termed at this stage and age of the world as "high jinks," with all the trimmings and side issues necessary to make the meeting one big, roaring success. Entertainment galore was afforded the members and the cup of good cheer was overflowing before the program had been gone through with.

At the instance of some of the leading boosters of the lodge, members of the local theatrical circle were induced to favor the audience with some entertainment. Every number proved to be a star with the with the brilliancy of the finest color. The Bligh theatre, the Wexford and the Ye Liberty show houses contributed, and old-time amusement seekers in Salem who attended lodge last night declared the program to be among the finest they have ever had the pleasure to see.

To cap the climax, the 22-piece orchestra from the asylum appeared on the stage. While Salem people have had occasion heretofore to hear music by some of the best bands and orchestras in the country, the asylum orchestra caused the Elks to sit up and take notice for fair last night. That band of finished musicians handled pieces in a fashion that would make the average traveling troupe look like two-bit buried in a phony gold brick, and that the asylum people's efforts were appreciated by the Elks remains without saying.

Every number on the program was out of the ordinary, in that the respective actors and actresses were determined to do their best. They performed as they never did before, and the entertainment was one that the members of the lodge will long remember.

HANSEL HANGS

of placing the usual straps on the body before hanging was evidently considered unwise, for the reason that Hansel could not have stood up under the great strain.

Hansel's Crime.

The crime which Oswald Hansel expiated on the gallows today was the murder of Judge Frank J. Taylor, president of the State Board of Pilot Commissioners, and one of the most prominent attorneys in Western Oregon. Meeting Judge Taylor in the railroad station at Astoria September 14, Hansel shot him down without a moment's warning.

Hansel gave as his reason for the murder that Judge Taylor drew up divorce papers for his wife, making charges against him, instead of endeavoring to effect a reconciliation.

At his trial Hansel's attorneys defended him on the grounds of insanity, but the jury found him guilty of murder in the first degree.

Hansel at one time was an inmate of the state insane asylum, but was discharged as cured.

MILITARY AVIATOR KILLED.

SAYS IN ONLY FEW CASES ARE PEOPLE BEHIND IN NOTES

State Treasurer Kay this morning, complying with the request of the state land board for certain information, gave it in a letter to G. G. Brown, clerk of the state land board, as follows:

"In compliance with the request made through you by the governor, we are herein submitting to you a statement of delinquent notes in the school and university funds. You may check up this list with your records and in case you find it correct, transmit same to His Excellency, as requested.

"This statement will show that there are about one hundred and forty-five notes on which the interest is delinquent, out of the several thousand notes in this fund. Of these there are three on which the interest has been delinquent since 1910; twenty-seven on which the interest has been delinquent since 1911; thirty-seven on which the interest has been delinquent since 1912, and the remaining seventy-six on which the interest has been delinquent since various dates this year.

Delinquent Per Cent Small.

"I am informed by Mr. Sutherland, who has been in this office for twenty-three years, that the per cent of delinquent notes is as small, if not less, than at any other time since he has been here and we are making every effort to collect the interest without working a hardship on the borrowers from this fund. We are in communication, with the attorneys for the board for the various counties, pertaining to collections on the oldest of these notes and whenever they advise such action we turn them over to the state land board with the recommendation that the mortgages be foreclosed, but do not do so against their advice or when we can make arrangements to collect the interest on a definite date, without putting the borrowers to such expense.

"The number of delinquents is much smaller than a few months ago. Many of those who are delinquent have agreed to pay on definite dates and we feel that we will be able to collect the interest on practically all of these notes within the near future without putting the borrowers from the school fund to great inconvenience and expense by foreclosure. Of course, more notes are becoming delinquent all the time, but so long as the list of delinquents is kept under two per cent we see no reason in creating a disturbance as the state is well secured on all of these loans."

POLICE DECLARE STOBY OF HOLDUP TO BE FAKE

According to the police today an investigation of the alleged hold-up in which Otto Ammen was said to have been the victim last Tuesday night has proven that Ammen has not been telling the truth. Officer Jack Welch stated today that Ammen was taken to within a short distance of his home east of the city in a taxi cab and as the result of a dispute with the cab driver over the fare, he was pounced upon by a man named Kenworthy, who was also riding in the auto, and pounded frightfully. A young man by the name of Wood tells Officer Welch that Ammen remonstrated when he was charged $1 for taking him nearly home and Kenworthy, who was along for company, jumped out of the cab and assaulted Ammen. Wood refused to tell the police all, and the man Kenworthy is now being sought by the officers.

Ammen tells the police that he was

"ANY FOOL CAN GET A DIVORCE, BUT IT TAKES INTELLIGENCE TO STAY MARRIED"

"You can't win any game except by playing it to win. Yet many women when they marry, believe as though they had won the game instead of just begun it!"

With these lines as a text, Anne Crawford Flexner, who admits that she has played to win—she is happily married and the mother of two children—has sprung into sudden fame as the author of "The Marriage Game," a sprightly comedy of modern marriage which has scored the greatest dramatic success of the week in New York.

This play presents the novel situation of a siren, who, after winning the attention of a group of semi-detached husbands, holds the mirror up to their wives that the astonished ladies may perceive that a wife's worst enemy is not the dreaded Other Woman, but purely and simply—herself!

"Marriage is a game—the most difficult yet the most fascinating game in the world," Mrs. Flexner explained to me yesterday. "I have observed it in Europe and in the United States—Mr. Flexner has been abroad a great deal in connection with his work for Mr. Rockefeller's General Education board—and it seems to me the German and English women play their cards better, even though Fate deals the American woman a better hand.

"I think the American girl accepts marriage as an end instead of a beginning. Once she has passed the altar she is too apt to feel anchored or becalmed when, in reality, she is just leaving the harbor upon an unknown and dangerous voyage! It is my belief that a man's interest in a woman ceases the moment he has realized there is nothing more to know about her.

"The thing that allures in man, woman or child is the undiscovered country—the Beyond. Many American women don't seem to have any beyond and are unable to create the illusion of it.

"This is a great pity, for the new generation of men demands a great deal from the women they seek as wives.

"They want intelligence, co-operation and comradeship. Very soon the doll-woman will discover that there is no body willing to provide the doll's house for her."

"If marriage is a game, as you say, how shall women play it to win?" I asked. "Perhaps there are rules."

"There are three principal rules," Mrs. Flexner answered with smiling readiness.

"The first is: Build no barriers between your husband and yourself. It is hard enough for any two human beings to understand each other when love and sympathy have let down all bars. The throwing up of artificial barricades—quarrels, sulks, silly affectations, is fatal to happiness.

"The second rule is: Let your husband lead—sometimes. He is entitled to his turn.

"The third is: Pursue no passionate pursuit—your husband may pursue another! Or at any rate she may pursue him! This applies to the bridge fiend, the society fiend, the woman who rides any of the hundred hobbies of modern life into the ground.

"After all, man plays the marriage game fairly—he supports the woman and her children. He is entitled to some return.

"I find that if the American woman doesn't like her hand she is too inclined to throw down her cards and say she won't play. Don't you agree with me?"

"As to my own view of the marriage game," I replied, "I am convinced that you finish at about the place you start. In other words, that in progressive matrimony you don't really progress; that first loves are best mainly because last loves turn out invariably to be no better! After all, any fool can get a divorce, but it takes intelligence to stay married!"

"Why doesn't some one say that to our young men and women?" Mrs. Flexner exclaimed. "Why don't we break through the conspiracy of silence that the world maintains against them?"

"Perhaps because we want them to get married," I suggested, "but after all, are there no rules for men in the marriage game?"

"There are," Mrs. Flexner replied, smilingly, "but those rules are another play!"
