LACK OF FACILITIES OR SOMETHING THERE

Judge Cleeton Says There Should Be Better Way of Caring for Unfortunate Girls.

SEGREGATION WOULD BE AN IMPORTANT FEATURE

Those Well-Versed in Crime Should Not Be Bunched With Amateurs at Industrial School.

The grand jury will begin Monday an investigation of the state industrial school girls, following the order of yesterday by Circuit Judge Cleeton. Discussing the situation, Judge Cleeton said last night:

"I never had any idea these girls were guilty of such a heinous crime until I heard the testimony.

"The evidence showed that Mrs. Craswell induced three other girls to put poison in coffee which was to be drunk by all persons connected with the institution, their object being to escape. I shall give the grand jury specific instructions regarding the investigation, for it must be thorough. The whole state is interested, for the girls are sent to the institution from all counties. It seems from the facts brought out at the trial that there is a lack of facilities or something at the school. The extremely wayward associates with the less wayward, and it appears that there is no way to administer the proper discipline.

"Unless means of segregating the girls is established there is no telling what the consequences may be. The evidence shows that one wayward and desperate girl can cause absolute confusion and disruption."

Ringo Favors It.

"Although I am not in the position to know just how the Oregon Industrial Training School for Girls has been conducted since that branch of our government was created by our last legislature, and am without authority to make any statements to the effect that the institution should be investigated by the grand jury, I am firm in the belief that the Marion county grand jury should visit the school and make a thorough investigation of the manner in which it has been, and is now being conducted."

This was the statement made this morning by County Attorney Ringo when asked to give his views concerning the order which has been made by Judge Cleeton, calling the grand jury in session for the sole purpose of visiting the training school.

"If there is the slightest reason for investigation of any of Marion county's public institutions or other institutions situated in the county which are conducted by the state, I am in favor of a grand jury investigation," declares County Attorney Ringo. "The people have a right to know how these institutions are being conducted, and I believe it is the duty of every well-meaning citizen in the county to assist the county officials in every way possible in determining just how things are going with such departments of the state or county government."

Helpless Institution. Adequate facilities with which to work in caring and guarding the inmates of the Oregon Industrial Training School for Girls has been questioned and for this reason Judge Cleeton has ordered a grand jury investigation. It is said that the investigation will reveal the fact that the officers of the school are powerless in their efforts to maintain the discipline necessary to the training of the inmates of the institution and that these circumstances have been brought by reason of a lack of facilities.

Room for Improvement. While the inmates of the school are not classed as criminals by Judge Cleeton, he believes that there should be some method devised, providing the equipment at the institution will permit, by which the girls will be unable to plot and scheme to desert the school or create animosity among themselves.

synonym of ability, who from his early boyhood has been identified with our city's best interest, who is known by most every citizen of Salem as a man of whom we would be fortunate indeed to have at the head of any department, especially where a force of men are employed, who has at many times sacrificed his own personal interests to be of service to the city and who on many occasions while in the old volunteer fire department risked his life and his health to save the lives and property of his fellowmen, all this counts for naught when the majority of our honorable council in their wisdom saw fit to turn him down for a more worthy man. Of course this was no frame up. Again I say we are to be congratulated in having our city affairs governed by a bunch who wouldn't for the whole world resort to any dirty, low-down politics.

The Willamette river is now dropping back to its regular winter stage. 7 feet, 8 inches. The Santiam river, it is reported, has again resumed its normal stage while all inflowing waters are gradually going down. Although the Willamette is on its downward course now, it is not at all likely that extreme low water will prevail from now on until the annual summer stage is in order.

Yvonne de Treville is a genuine coloratura soprano of wonderful flexibility and beautiful quality. She is proud to say that she is an American and studied singing in the United States, and that her voice was perfectly placed before going to Europe. An instance of her Yankee pluck is the fact that she manages her own concert tour this year, which is her first tour of the states. She has met with unbounded success.

Attorney-General Crawford yesterday, in placing a construction upon the tax laws, held that if taxes were not paid April 1, the amounts remaining unpaid bear interest, and that a penalty of 1 per cent a month for five months must be assessed. He said that all unpaid taxes became delinquent September 1, and that 1 per cent must be added to the delinquent amount on that date, and a 10 per cent penalty must be added to the amount to draw interest at 12 per cent a year until paid.

The Markets

The wheat market remains unchanged and there is little movement. Eggs are plentiful and prices are coming down, 37 cents being the quotation Thursday. The two-bit egg is in sight within the next few weeks. Hop growers refuse to sell at present prices and there is no movement in the markets. An English dispatch Thursday says: "Demand increasing, Brewers more interested. Continents firm, but quiet." There was a famine in the celery department of the market at Portland during the early part of the week but this has been relieved by the arrival of a carload from California Wednesday.
