While not realizing that many a fellow the history of this particular case is interesting, for in it is told again the story of the dependence of certain birds upon man, and the cat's sympathetic response.

When after the roof was placed upon the big marble and terra cotta edifice where it is expected the laws of the state will be construed for many days to come, a kitten with a hind leg broken by one of the workmen, and in due course of time the leg got well. But the cat still remained and soon became one of the masons who were then working on the building.

Monday the building was completed and labor shooed off, all the former occupants remained. Perry Raymond, clerk of the court, heard the story of the cat and forthwith declared it would have a home in the building so long as he remained there.
