

Easter Services in Capital City Churches

RESURRECTION

AN EASTER POEM
 By LANNIE HAYNES MARTIN

[Copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.]

A SEPULCHER of sodden earth, a pall of cold gray sky;
 A dreadful silence, save the dirge of the wailing wind's last sigh;
 A dreary void, all colorless; no vibrant life doth thrill
 Across the widening wilderness—the far dim stars are still.
 Beneath the bare, entombing earth a germ of life is pent
 In graveclothes, till an inward thrill, and cerements are rent,
 And groping roots reach out to grasp the bosom of the world,
 And upward springs a budding plant with leaves like wings unfurled,
 Upon its head a coronal of glittering rainbow hue,
 Like saint with fabled aureole—a lily crowned with dew.

THE heart's a tomb, all pulseless, cold,
 Long hid beneath the silent mold
 Of Doubt and Vanity and Hate,
 And yet beneath this mountain weight
 A spark divine with power untold.

When from the tomb the stone is rolled
 From unseen roots of Faith there spring
 The leaves of Hope, fast blossoming,
 And then a wondrous flower in bloom—
 The flower of Love—and from the tomb
 The soul has risen. Thus re-born,
 Dost doubt the resurrection morn?
