OUR SOLDIERS MEMORIAL DAY, 1914

BY ARTHUR J. BURDICK

Copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.]

NOT now the firm, elastic tread
As when to war they marched away;
They're battling time, are warring years,
In bloodless battles of today.

The whitened hairs above their brows,
The wrinkles and the bended forms—
These are the scars they now receive,
The wounds that fall in silent storms.

Ah, once they faced the deadly fire
And stood where shot and shell fell fast!
They fight time's battles bravely now
As fought they battles of the past.

And, though no fields of carnage now
Spread horrors to the shrinking eye,
Upon time's field each passing day
The victims of the battle lie.

So now we pluck the fragrant flower
And weave the laurel wreath today
To lay beside the silent forms
Of those who fell beside the way.

Cavalrymen At Close Quarters

One of the Prettiest Saber Fights of the Great War

Colonel E. M. McCook, at the head of a cavalry division from Burnside's army, met and charged upon two divisions of Longstreet's men under Generals Morgan and Armstrong.

While McCook led his division at a galloping charge, Colonel O. H. La

THE CHARGE ON THE GUNS.

Grange, at the head of a demi-brigade, came upon a superior force of Morgan's troopers around a battery, made a dash for them and sabered the gunners as well as their cavalry supporters, taking two cannon and many prisoners.

When the main opposing lines fairly met on open ground there ensued one of the prettiest hand to hand combats of the war, at the end of which the redoubtable Morgan was routed and his battleflag and escort were captured.

Most women who claim to be man haters are unable to prove it.
