BY MOLLIE RUNCORN.

THE standings of the cherry queen contestants at noon today were: Miss Craig, 2470; Miss Fleming, 2138, and Miss Lily, 2041. These figures are not considered seriously by the supporters of the different young women, however, as it is known that hundreds of votes are being withheld until the balloting closes at 6 o'clock tonight.

Mrs. B. K. Lawson sang the offertory "Ruth" at the Sunday morning services of the Episcopal church. Mrs. Lawson, who possesses a charming voice, will be presented by Dan F. Langenberg at his closing recital to be given about the first of September.

One of the most artistic and appreciated musicals given this season was the first of the closing recitals of Miss Beatrice Shelton last night at the First Congregational church.

Pupils presented were: Miss Bernice Sauter, Miss Lela Slater, Miss Ada Miller and Miss Evelyn Reigelman. The assistants added much to the program. Miss Carlton Sullivan, of Portland, delighted with her harp solo and accompaniments. Mrs. W. Carlton Smith appeared in a vocal number, "Melodie in the Wood," by Goetz, and Miss Mary Schultz, Miss Lillian Stege and Miss Pearl Verler assisted with violin accompaniments. Mrs. Robert Savage, Mrs. W. P. Babeock and Miss Ada Miller, vocalists, also assisted. "The Melodrama of Hiawatha," read by Perry Prescott Reigelman, was doubly effective with piano accompaniment played by Miss Evelyn Reigelman.

Mrs. Clara H. Waldo, of Portland, has taken a cottage at Nehalem beach for the summer.

Mrs. Joseph Baumgartner and children, Lenta and Josephine, are guests of the Harry Stapletons in Roseburg.

Mrs. Jay King and small son, J. Everett, of Butte, Mont., are guests for the summer of Mrs. Blanch Howard on Oak street. Mrs. King was married to Mrs. Frances Howard before her marriage. Last Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Howard, assisted by Miss Irene Howard, entertained a group of small folk in honor of Mrs. King's son, who celebrated his first birthday. The little guests were Russell Emmett, Genevieve Emmett, Edith Emmett, Doyl Muchmore, Blanch Humphreys, Bernice Humphreys and John Francis Lane.

Mrs. J. J. Houser and children Geraldine and Jack, of Astoria, are being entertained as house guests of Mrs. B. L. Steeves.

Miss Inez Goltra was among the Salem people noted at the exercises at Caemawa Sunday.

Dr. and Mrs. Richard Avison and daughter, Genevieve, motored to Chemawa with Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Carrier, Sunday, to attend the commencement exercises. Dr. Avison delivering the baccalaureate address.

Mrs. E. Best entertained about 30 of her friends last week at an old-fashioned quilting at her country home west of Salem. Miss Jennie Best who is a bookkeeper at the First National bank, was given guest honors. Dinner was served, the hostess being assisted by Miss Rebecca Best, Miss Vesta Gardner and Mrs. W. Calder. During the afternoon Mrs. M. Wilson pleased with several piano selections.

Mrs. H. L. French, who has been the guest of her son, H. E. French, on Court street, returned to her home in Corvallis yesterday.

Miss Esther Plumer became the bride of Professor George R. Schreiber at high noon today. Rev. G. W. Plumer, father of the bride, performing the ceremony.

Professor Schreiber is a former instructor at Willamette university, and last year taught in the Woodburn high school. He has been elected superintendent of the Canby schools for the coming year.

The members of the Woman's Home Missionary society of the First Methodist church presided at a silver tea Monday afternoon at the beautiful home of Mrs. B. L. Steeves, from 2 until 5 o'clock.

Lovely pink roses, with white ocean spray, were used effectively in decorating the drawing and living rooms. Festooning the dining room were fragrant white and purple sweet peas, combined with maiden hair fern.

Receiving with Mrs. Steeves were: Mrs. I. H. Van Winkle, Mrs. H. H. Vandevort and Mrs. N. H. Baker. Mrs. Richard Avison and Mrs. Fletcher Howard were stationed in the dining room, and they were assisted by Mrs. W. E. Kirk, Mrs. F. A. Legg, Mrs. E. B. Millard, Mrs. F. A. Thompson, Miss Lottie Penn and Miss Ruth Spoon.

A large number of the women of the church and their friends called during the afternoon.

Miss Laura Austin, a graduate of Willamette university, after spending her summer's vacation in California will leave for India, where she goes as a missionary. Lester Proebstel, a member of this year's graduating class of the university, will also enter the missionary field, sailing for India June 26.

There was scarcely standing room in the opera house last Thursday evening when the commencement exercises of Sacred Heart academy were held. At the first curtain the seven graduates rising, bowed graciously to the audience, while Miss Helen Barr and one of their own number, Miss Louise Berdoerfer, executed brilliantly on two baby grand pianos. A violin solo "Scenes de Ballet," followed by Miss Marie Campbell, which, though most difficult, was handled in a very masterly manner. The curtain next rose on 16 young girls dressed in flowing robes of pink, green, yellow and white. With Miss Lucille Jaskoski, 13, at the piano they rendered the magnificent Cantata, "The Lady of Shalott," by Tennyson, in an artistic manner.

The sympathy of the audience was with the poor lady who, when half sick of shadows saw the reflection of the gay Sir Lancelot in her magic mirror, and brought upon herself the dreadful result of which the whisper had warned her, upon her looking toward the mystic city. The Cantata closed with the girls grouped around the lady who, "singing in her song had died, floating down to Camelot." Especial praise is due to Miss Marie Campbell for her beautiful rendition of many difficult solos, every word of which was distinctly understood.

The all-powerful Schubert-Liszt piano solo, "The Erlking," was skillfully rendered by the talented young musician, Miss Louise Berdoerfer, 14. The next number was a short but beautiful sketch, "The Rock of Destiny," presented by the seven graduates. They made their entrance upon the stage in a beautiful golden shallop, "The Semper Fidelis," singing a Venetian boat song to the accompaniment of the harp. Upon anchoring they prepared to ascend the famous rock when St. Rosalie suddenly appeared and chided them for their belief in the pagan myth. However, she told them that because of their unguilefulness she had obtained from God that they could see their destiny. Mounting the rock each in turn as the saint bade, they beheld their future in the still waters beneath them. St. Rosalie then took the helm of their vessel and they left the enchanted isle, raising their voices in the beautiful hymn, "A Prayer for Strength." Many have pronounced it most picturesque number presented upon the stage in years. The graceful grouping of the maidens on the rocks as they expectantly awaited their turn, and their quaint but exquisitely beautiful dresses, were especially noteworthy. The academy orchestra gave a most artistic rendition of "Valleria Rusticana," accompanied on the harp by Miss Louise Berdoerfer, and "Marche Militaire," with Miss Lucille Jaskoski at the piano.

The conferring of graduation honors followed. A tiny maiden, clothed in snowy white, preceded each senior, bearing on a silver tray the diploma and a gold medal awarded for excellence in department, and carrying a laurel wreath on her arm. Rev. A. A. Moore delivered the farewell address in which he congratulated the graduates and exhorted them to be ever faithful to their Alma Mater, and loyal to their motto, "Semper Fidelis." The exercises ended with a vocal chorus, "Fly, Singing Bird, Fly," Elgar, by the vocal class.

THRILL AFTER THRILL PROMISED IN STORY

'Million Dollar Mystery' Will be Seen in Picture and Read in Story Written by Harold MacGrath. Fascinating.

Compellingly interesting and replete with thrills, is "The Million Dollar Mystery," Thanhauser's forty-six-reel serial, which will be presented to the Salem theatregoers in a short time.

Harold MacGrath, author of "Kathlyn," has written a serial story from the scenario by Lloyd Lonergan, and this will appear in the Salem Capital Journal, Saturday, June 27. "The Million Dollar Mystery" is admittedly the most stupendous of American motion picture productions. No expense has been spared in filling it with wonderful locations and these thrills of excitement which the present-day audiences demand.

But, unlike the serials previously produced, the thrills in this story are consequent upon a logical chain of circumstances and not merely to bolster up the action. For the first time in the history of photography an actual motion picture taken under the sea at a depth of 200 feet will be shown as the delight of the film fan. The sky, too, has contained its thrill, daring aeronauts lending their years of scientific training to carry forward the action as outlined by the pen of the imaginative Harold MacGrath.

The mysterious ceremonies of the Black Hundred, an organization of Russian millionaires, bound by secret; how they reached out for Florence Gray; how each time they were foiled, and how with a persistence born of fiendish determination, they pursued their victim, will be disclosed. An amazing cast of film favorites will carry the action of the story and exemplify on the screen how the dexterous hand of Harold MacGrath has woven this wonderful fabric of romance and intrigue. Florence La Badie, best known of young screen stars, plays the part of Florence Gray, the heroine; Marguerite Snow, veteran of Thanhauser leading women, plays the part of Princess Olga, the conspirators' feminine inspiration; and Lila Chester, Susan, the companion of Florence Gray, who ineffectually stands between Florence and the princess. James Cruze, Thanhauser leading man, plays the part of Jim Norton, a newspaper reporter whose duty brings him into contact with Florence Gray and makes him her gratuitous protector. Sidney Bracy in the role of the family butler presents character work rarely seen in motion pictures. Frank Farrington and Albert Froom, as the conspirators, and Alfred Norton, who plays as Stanley Hargreaves, give the strongest possible support to the action of the story, presenting with effective continuity the thrills, which seemingly ensue one after another.

Daddy's Bedtime Story
The Plans Of the Crickets For Their Ball
Jack Enjoys Painting Hats and Gowns.

EVELYN had been playing with her paper dolls almost all day. Jack of course, was not very much interested in paper dolls, but one thing he did like about Evelyn's paper doll family was that they were always requiring new clothes. And Jack had the most complete paint box! He thoroughly enjoyed painting beautiful hats and gowns to match Evelyn was always so pleased because he made them such very bright clothes when daddy came home he found all the paper dolls dressed up for the evening and looking very fine.

"They are to hear the story, too," said Evelyn.

"Tell us about the crickets," suggested Jack. "We heard them making such a noise this evening. We were quite certain they must have been having a party."

"Why, of course," said daddy. "Tonight is the night for their annual June ball. They have been getting ready for this for days and days. You must have heard the guests arriving. They have asked ever so many for tonight. In fact, I have heard that the crickets said it was to be the largest ball ever held in the cricket world."

"All of the cricket band are out for the occasion, and they have been practicing for days, for they say they will play only the very latest dance music."

"I fancy it will be a wonderful ball, and no doubt it will keep you two children awake, for, with all the music, the singing, the laughing and chatting it will be hard for you to get to sleep. Perhaps it may even keep the paper dolls awake."

Evelyn smiled at this, for it pleased her to have daddy speak of her paper dolls, especially as they were listening to the story too.

"The crickets," continued daddy, "have invited the frogs, the toads, the lizards and a number of moths to their ball, and they have all been trying to make themselves appear their very best for tonight."

"I have heard that the crickets have prepared the finest of suppers to be served after the dance is over."

"What have they planned to have?" asked Evelyn.

"They are going to have moss soup, watercress cutlets, strawberry water ice and spring water to drink. Of course there may not be any strawberries to the strawberry ice, but at least it will have the color of strawberries."

At this one of the paper dolls fell over on its face, so daddy said, "I certainly think it must be bedtime."
