CARPENTIER-SMITH FIASCO MAKES TALK

Claim Made That Referee Corri Tried to Bether Smith and Wanted Carpentier to Win the Fight.

CARPENTIER WAS LARGELY TO BLAME FOR THE FOUL

Dropped to His Knees As Smith Struck—Englishmen Turn Up Their Noses at American Boxers as Unfair.

London, July 17.—The aftermath of the battle for the white heavyweight world's championship here, in which Georges Carpentier of France was awarded the decision over Gunboat Smith of California in the sixth round on a foul, promised today to furnish material for controversy for months to come. The American contingent outspokenly characterized the outcome as an outrage while undoubtedly English ring followers regarded it as further proof of what they considered the unfair tactics of American boxers.

Referee Eugene Corri decided that Smith fouled his opponent by hitting him when he was on his knees. Technically, even Smith's warmest supporters admit that he did hit Carpentier, but they assert that the blow was entirely unintentional and that it barely grazed the Frenchman's neck. Smith had just floored his opponent with a hard right uppercut. Carpentier rose to his knees and began to straighten up. Smith started a terrific left for the jaw to catch him when his knees were clear of the floor. At that instant Carpentier dropped to his knees again. Smith apparently tried to stop the blow but could not and it landed on Carpentier's neck. Just what happened to the gunboat's last punch is sure to cause an everlasting controversy.

Even those closest to the ringside disagree widely. Some say that it jolted Carpentier's spine hard at the back of the neck; some that it grazed his neck, and others that it missed entirely.

The consensus of opinion today seemed to give Carpentier the better of the fight on its merits, particularly in view of the knockdown he scored in the fourth round, but there was always the possibility that Smith would have won in a few more rounds. Undoubtedly the English boxing rules bothered the Americans. He was cautioned several times to hold up his hands. With a referee in the ring, as is the American custom, to step between the men when one is knocked down, the foul likely never would have been committed.

Smith's manager, Jim Buckley, of New York, was not slow to express his opinion of the decision. "It was high-way robbery," he declared. "Smith knocked Carpentier out with a right on the point of the jaw. The Frenchman went down, and Smith, in making another punch, could not pull himself back and just hit Carpentier's face."

"After the first two punches I saw that we were going to get the worst of it. Corri kept telling Smith to keep his hands up, although they were up all the time. He wanted to bether Smith. We have evidence that this was intentional and that he wanted Carpentier to win."

Smith issued a challenge to fight Carpentier again within two weeks or at any time.

"If ever a man was robbed on a technicality," Smith said, "I was robbed last night. I may have hit Carpentier, but it was unintentional and because he dropped back after he was getting to his feet. I can whip him every day in the week and all I want is a fair chance to demonstrate it. If Carpentier will give me another chance, either in London or America, I will give him all the side bets he wants. I was beating him and knocked him down just before the so-called foul."

"While I regret the ending of the bout," Carpentier said, "there was nothing else for the referee to do. Smith knocked me down. I slipped after trying for a swing. Then he didn't wait. He rushed me and landed a punch before I had a chance to defend myself. However, I was winning at the time and was scoring all the points. I am faster than Smith and that I have a punch was proved by the way I knocked him down."

"Smith is a hard fighter. After the fourth round I expected to win. I missed a heavy right swing and slipped again. I am anxious for another match with him."

Most of the London newspapers today agreed that the blow for which Smith was disqualified as intentional was unintentional. Boxing experts were unanimous in the opinion that Smith did not realize he was committing a foul, and some of them were emphatic in stating that Carpentier's distress was simulated.

A match between Carpentier and Jack Jackson for the world's title was being discussed today.

Such a scene of confusion and excitement as that enacted at the end of the bout was never before witnessed in London, and it was some time before the crowd realized that Carpentier had been awarded the decision on a foul.

No count of ten was made. Several ringriders claimed they heard Referee Corri shout to Smith as he jumped into the ring, "that's all right." Carpentier's manager, Deschamps, scrambled through the ropes at this point, shrieking at the top of his voice. Buckley and others in Smith's corner shouted protests to Corri, claiming that Deschamps' entrance into the ring should disqualify the French boxer. Others shouted to Smith's seconds not to enter the ring. Smith stood with outstretched arms to resume the fight.

Then Corri declared Carpentier the winner.

London "Sporting Life" said today: "Perhaps it would have been better had Referee Corri announced his decision more promptly."

Joe Boehling

By A. M. Corrigan.

Red McGhee says:

They've called Clark Griffith "Grif the Fox" since those days when he worked on the box for New York's early Yanks. An' he's fox yet, though Washington is payin' him as boss to run its baseball team's ranks. I mention Grif 'cause he's the guy whose ever-foxy choosin' eye saw Young Joe Boehling's worth.

The south p a w rookie Grif first saw was fresh an' green an' just as raw as good ol' Mother Earth.

Joe came on fast—Grif showed the way an' tutored him from day to day in all his ol' fox stunts. Last year the youngster got his turn. He cut loose speed an' curves to burn an' never faltered once. He went a fifty-fifty gait with speedy Johnson, his team mate—hung up his share of wins. He did his little job up brown an' mowed the league's best clouters down like they was bowlin' pins.

This year when Johnson stopped a bit the south armed youth stepped out and hit the bullseye one more tap. He kept the Senators in the stride till Walter's loasin' hoodoo died—Joe filled a great big gap. The kid's a bear, there's no two ways. He's earned a great big heap o' praise an' oughta have it all. So when you're tounin' Johnson, bo, just slip a good word in for Joe—he's also pitchin' ball.

A RETURN MATCH IS PRACTICALLY SURE

Fight Arranged on a Winner-Take-All Basis and With a Side Bet of $20,000, Added to $50,000 Purse.

London, July 17.—A return match between Georges Carpentier of Paris and Gunboat Smith of California, whom the Frenchman defeated on a foul in the sixth round of last night's bout here, was practically assured tonight for next December.

The only possible hitch in the match is over a $20,000 side bet demanded by Carpentier. As Smith has already stated that he stands ready to make any wager to get another chance at the Frenchman, this detail is expected to be arranged.

Dick Burge, who promoted last night's battle, offered a $50,000 purse for a return engagement. Smith accepted the offer, and said he wanted to meet Carpentier on a winner-take-all basis. Carpentier agreed to this, and went the American one better by demanding a $20,000 side bet.

Smith's manager, James Buckley, of New York, met Eugene Corri, who refereed last night's bout, this afternoon, but refused to shake hands with him. Corri explained that he was convinced that Smith did not intend to commit a foul, and said he would have "fired" qualified Carpentier if he had known that the latter's manager, Deschamps, and entered the ring before a decision was rendered.

No difficulty is looked for in the matter of securing the necessary backing for Smith to clinch another fight for the white heavyweight world's championship.

FREDDIE WELSH IS COMING TO AMERICA

Welsh Will Make His Home at Los Angeles After the First of the Year—He Lost Money on His Fight.

By Hal Sheridan.

New York, July 17.—Advice received from London today contained the surprising statement that Freddie Welsh, the new world's lightweight champion, intends to make America his home after the first of the year, and that he expects to locate in Los Angeles, Cal., where he has property interests. The statement is unqualified, and its source is considered reliable. Only the future, however, can prove its value. The fact that it cost Welsh $500 to win the title from Ritchie may have something to do with his plans to leave the "tight little isle."

Welsh lost money on the championship battle with Ritchie because he agreed to split even with Charles Cochran, who promoted the Olympia affair on the money left after Ritchie received his $25,000—$15,000 guarantee and $10,000 for moving picture and advertising privileges. The gross receipts amounted to $21,000, much less than expected. Harry Pollock, Welsh's manager, had estimated the receipts at about $35,000. Cochran probably lost about $10,000 on the show.

The Johnson-Moran fight in Paris drew $36,200. After deducting 10 per cent for the pool of France, Johnson received 50 per cent of the remaining $32,580, or $16,290, while Moran and his manager, Dan McKittrick, and Promotor Vienne divided what was left, $16,290.

SEEM READY TO DROP KINCAID PROSECUTION

Sheriff Who Has Been Watching House Quits and She Is No Longer Even Under Surveillance.

San Jose, Cal., July 17.—Mrs. Raymond I. Kincaid, for whom District Attorney A. E. Clark and Deputy Sheriff Elmer Gum of Placer county arrived in San Francisco three days ago with a warrant accusing her of responsibility for Mrs. Kathleen Bluet's death in Auburn last January, was not even under surveillance today.

Ever Clark, who swore to the warrant, admitted he had his doubts concerning the case. When he visited Mrs. Kincaid yesterday she offered to make a statement. On his return, however, after leaving her house to get a stenographer, her attorneys refused to re-admit him.

Upon this Clark withdrew the guard he had had on the house and left. Later he said her attorneys had promised she would go to Auburn as soon as she was able to travel, but her husband asserted that the officers left without any agreement and he believed they had decided to drop the prosecution.

Mrs. Kincaid, who has been in bed since her daughter's birth a month ago, seemed none the worse for her experience with the Placer county authorities. She denied again today the charges made against her.
