ing tango, panned and lettered in bunny-bug black, and is the only thing visible this side of the enspirited peaks of the cool and classy Cascades.
The members of the local order of Moose are planning a big meeting in Moose Hall tonight when they and their friends will be given an opportunity to meet and hear Supreme National Director Edgar Easter and Supreme Instructor Leonard Graver who will give addresses on subjects of interest. The meeting will open at 8 o'clock, and a cordial invitation has been extended to the public to attend. J. Fred Day, deputy national director, announces that the spacious club rooms will be thrown open for inspection and that a committee will be in waiting to receive and conduct the visitors through them.
Another suit against the proprietors of the Salem Lumber company, Roy Wasson and M. A. McLoughlin, was filed today by E. T. Crowe & Company of Portland. The plaintiff asks judgment against defendants in the sum of $770, and interest. This sum is alleged to be due on certain building materials delivered to the Salem Lumber company in May of this year.
Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Miller and Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Patterson motored from Portland this morning and stopped in at the Capital Journal office visiting old friends. They have Eugene as their destination and will visit the H. C. A. Miller family at Irving station. The party are touring in a new '38' phaeton Packard recently purchased by Mr. Patterson. It is the first car of its type to come down the valley. The party had a basket of luscious 'Giant' cherries just to show valley folks they were not the whole thing in cherries.
Dr. J. H. Garnjobst, who is with Dr. E. E. Fisher, is now on his way to New York City where he will continue his specializing work with x-rays. Dr. Garnjobst, who is the only x-ray specialist in Salem, left Salem June first and will be away until the first of September. Since his departure he has taken work in the leading hospitals in Rochester, Minn.; Chicago, Battle Creek, Mich., and before his return to Salem will visit the leading hospitals in other of the larger Eastern cities.
State Superintendent of Public Instruction Churchill returned today from St. Paul, Minn., where he attended the convention of the National Teachers' association. Mr. Churchill took a leading part in the proceedings, and, according to the eastern papers, his suggestions in the discussions on school superintendents and their work were highly commended by the other delegates. The superintendent said he suffered considerably from the intense heat, but aside from that had a fine trip.
At the home of J. A. Bernardi, 458 South High street, two large English walnut trees growing in the back yard give striking proof of the success with which they can be raised here. The trees are laden with nuts and blossoms, although they are but ten years old. So thick are the nuts along the limbs that they resemble a heavy crop of pines. The nuts are exceptionally large and have a remarkably thin shell and have attracted the attention of walnut growers on account of that peculiarity.
Sheriff John Grant of Polk county telephoned to Sheriff Esch today that a horse belonging to J. D. Redding had been stolen from a barn in Independence. The animal is a brown mare, round built, shod with plates and has a black mane and tail. A Cheyenne saddle and a pair of leather chaps with a fringe down the sides were taken at the same time.
The case of A. O. Anderson against A. H. Trindall and W. H. Trindall, which was tried in the circuit court yesterday afternoon resulted in the jury finding a verdict for the defendants. This was an action brought to recover money on a promissory note, but it was private and intimate letters from Caillaux to his wife. Everything else had been in the shape of a curtain raiser.

Threatened to Kill Him.
Again the president tried to calm Caillaux, using all his powers of persuasion. Vainly he tried to obtain Caillaux's promise to investigate the matter further and to get the advice of his lawyers. Caillaux rose from the chair into which he had fallen, and facing the president said:
'If Calmette does that I'll kill him.'
The conversation continued for a few minutes more, the president urging Caillaux not to do anything hasty. But the president's impression was at the end of the interview, that all his arguments had not had the least effect on the minister of finance. The idea that Calmette intended to publish the letters was firmly fixed in Caillaux's head and nothing could get it out. So thinking, the president, followed by Caillaux, entered the room where the cabinet sat writing.
During the afternoon, Premier Gaston Doumergue called on the president to discuss foreign office matters. At first the president wavered between telling Doumergue what had happened that morning and keeping the matter to himself. He decided that as Doumergue was not only Caillaux's premier but his personal friend also, that he ought to mention it. So he described the scene of the morning, asking Doumergue to do what he could to allay Caillaux's feelings and stop, if possible, some regrettable act.
At the hour when Doumergue was taking leave of the Elysee, however, Mme. Caillaux was entering the reception room at 'Le Figaro.'

The Path of Sorrow
A Tense Drama of Society and the Underworld.
(IN THREE PARTS)
One must be hard and unsympathetic indeed to look with dry eyes upon this appealing three-part Warner's Feature. 'The Path of Sorrow' hits home in a never-to-be-forgotten way, but it is not morbid nor is it depressing.
The story moves with incredible swiftness and the observer will surely appreciate the clever situations and the way the production is staged and directed.
Philip Norton's life is saddened by the home-coming of his daughter, Laura, a vain widow who thinks more of dress and clothes than she does of her ten-year-old son, Frank. His anguish is quite apparent, as he observes his daughter openly make love to Richard Harding, his trusted secretary. Fortunately for the banker's peace of mind, Harding receives Laura coldly and expresses his preference for Helen, a poor seamstress. Laura finds a note-book that Harding has dropped and learns from it that he and Helen have secretly married.
Taking the butler into her confidence, Laura outlines a plan for revenge that will put Harding behind prison bars.
A few mornings later, Norton discovers his private safe open and the contents scattered about. Suspicion points to Harding, and when a pencil inscribed with his initials is found in the room his doom is sealed.
A few months later Helen dies as her baby daughter comes into the world. Fifteen years later a dramatic meeting occurs between Laura and the butler who was her accomplice in the safe robbery. The shock kills Laura, who leaves a confession absolving Harding of the crime.
Menetme Harding's daughter has grown up as a pickpocket--the tool of some clever crooks.
The closing scenes of 'The Path of Sorrow' picture the reunion of father and daughter, her welcome into the home of Laura's son, the butler's attempt to blow up the banker's home, and for a climax the butler's confession clearing Harding's name.
