ROBBED THE TRAIN TO FEED HIS FAMILY

James Hogue on Trial for Holding Up Train Confesses He Did It, but Puts Up Pathetic Excuse.

San Francisco, July 22.—The trial of James Hogue, who held up and robbed a Southern Pacific train near here about two months ago, began today before Superior Judge Dunne. The entire forenoon was consumed in jury selection. The robbery, to which Hogue confessed, was a particularly daring one. Hogue, an experienced railroad man, boarded the train after stopping it by manipulating the signal wires. He had gone nearly through the train and robbed several passengers when two railroad detectives, who happened to be in a forward coach, opened fire on him. Hogue was seriously wounded and has spent most of the time since the robbery in a hospital. He said he decided to hold up the train to get money to buy food for his wife and two small children, who had not eaten for days.

WEST SALEM.

Mr. Glenn Adams has repaired the Fenell house, which adds greatly in appearance to the pleasant home.

A merry crowd of young people gathered at the Simon residence Thursday evening to surprise Miss Mary who, with her parents, will start Monday for a visit to Canadian friends.

Music and games were enjoyed until the cool hours of night, when a bountiful lunch was served.

The services of Marsal J. H. Eaton were required recently to put out of its misery a horse that had been over-driven from near Vancouver, Wash., by a young man, who stated that he was on his way to Grand Ronde to work.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Frazure Sundayed at the Clay Heise home near Pratum. F. L. Woods has about completed digging a trench and laying of pipes from his residence to the fruit drier, where he can obtain a bountiful supply of good water pumped from a deep well for his home.

Mesdames Frazure, Nicols and Brock were among the guests who attended the birthday party of Mrs. C. Young recently.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wilson had the pleasure of entertaining a week-end party, their son, C. M. Wilson, a railroad man, and his wife, of Portland.

Geo. Loban had the misfortune to lose a valuable horse Tuesday morning. The West Side Auto Delivery loaded to the limit with goods for Eola neighborhood was going along rapidly when the driver's thoughts got mixed up with a falling sack of wheat machines, and what not, when, lo! a crash! broken fence and flying glass. No one hurt but the lamps.

Mrs. R. A. Hunt has returned from a lengthy visit from Vancouver and Orick, in Washington, and Portland and suburbs, Oregon. While in St. Johns she called on ex-Governor Fletcher, who is in very poor health.

Misses Leana and Leola Crossman, of Portland, accompanied Mrs. Hunt home and will be her guests for a couple of weeks.

There will be an adjourned meeting of the city council Thursday morning for southeastern Colorado, where they expect to make their home.

Mr. Walter Gerth has moved into his commodious new store building and is now well prepared to serve his patrons.

Mr. S. F. Walters and family, recent arrivals from Brookings, South Dakota, have rented and moved into the Clay Heise bungalow.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Hamilton have gone to Newport for an outing. Miss Beatrice Crawford, who was elected to teach the intermediate department of our school, has resigned to take up different work.

NO MORE RELIEF FUNDS.

Nanaimo, B. C., July 22.—At a meeting of the local organization of the United Mine Workers of America last night, the members were informed by a letter from Frank Farrington, a member of the national executive committee and officer in charge of the strike on Vancouver Island, that no more relief money would be paid to the strikers, owing to the unfavorable financial condition of the international union.

The organization has been paying out about $16,000 weekly here in strike benefits since the inception of the strike, more than a year ago.

T. J. Bligh was a passenger on the regular morning Oregon Electric train for Portland.

ATTACK VIOLATES

Princess De Mesagne-Estradere, former society editor of "Le Figaro," who gave up her position shortly before Calmette was killed, testified that the editor offered her a large sum, more than 30,000 francs—to arrange an interview between him and Calmette's divorced wife.

The witness said she refused, whereupon Calmette made a similar offer to one of her friends, who also refused.

Mme. Estradere afterward told Mme. Calmette of the incident, expressing indignation that the editor should attempt such a thing, her understanding being that he wanted to secure certain personal letters from Calmette to his wife for publication, which the witness considered highly improper.

Newsletters Persecuted Him. Referee Emile Labeyrie, of the bankruptcy court, former chief of cabinet under Calmette, told the court that the latter repeatedly refused offers of information damaging to Calmette, which he might have been in answer to the editor's attacks on himself.

After Calmette had been killed, the witness was told by Gaston Vidal, former city editor of the Paris Journal, that Franz Reichel and a man named Fonvielle, agents for "Le Figaro" had tried to persuade Monnet and Mazara, friends of a man named Schneider, a claimant to the Prieu estate, to charge that Schneider and Calmette were negotiating with one another for the estate's settlement on a basis of a large payment to Calmette.

Not only Labeyrie asserted, were Monnet and Mazara offered large sums of money but positions on "Le Figaro" at salaries of $3,000 annually. If they would make the accusation in writing.

All the officials under Calmette were convinced of the latter's honesty, the witness declared, but they could see that Calmette's campaign against him was influencing public opinion and worrying Calmette, who, however, kept his dignity and ignored the attacks.

The day after the "Ton Jo" letter's publication, testified Labeyrie, he could see that his chief looked ill.

"Calmette will not succeed in heading me off," the witness told me, however, "the witness went on. 'Whatever the nature of his attacks I shall continue to do what I consider right, even if he succeeds in killing me.'

The Woman Suffered. "From this moment I understood what Mme. Calmette must be suffering.

"She exerted upon her husband a fine influence and their household was tenderly united. In my position one cannot fail to know any discord between husband and wife. I saw them together and visited their house almost daily.

"I had heard of certain letters addressed by Calmette to his wife before their marriage, so was not surprised, on the day of the shooting, to see Mme. Calmette enter her husband's office in a state of extreme nervous depression.

"So much was I impressed that at about 5 in the afternoon I called up her home to talk with her. Unfortunately she had already left.

"I went with Calmette to the police commissary that night. I saw Mme. Calmette there. She was apparently calm, yes, to those who did not know her, but I could see beneath the surface of this naturally quiet woman the agony and exasperation she was suffering, her fine senses dulled as if by a blow.

"The night haunts me to this day." Was Nervous and Agitated. Editor-in-Chief Yvon Delbos of "Le Radical," an important morning newspaper, testified that he was in Calmette's office the day of the shooting, when Mme. Calmette called for her husband.

She told him, she said, in guarded words, of her fears that "Le Figaro" was about to publish more of her private letters. "She appeared to me," the witness added, "very much depressed, very nervous and greatly agitated. She reminded me of a hunted animal."

Editor Edmond De Mesnil of "Le Rappel," another morning newspaper, said Mme. Calmette told him, the day before the shooting, that it was possible her husband's enemies might publish "the Fabre document," charging Calmette with responsibility for the escape of Rochette, the swindler, who got away with a fortune of millions through his financial schemes.

She knew, she said, the witness related, of at least two or three newspapers that had copies of the document, but she appeared little worried concerning the matter.

"I do not think for a moment," said De Mesnil, "that fear of the publication of this document was her motive for shooting Calmette."

A Mutual Friend Testifies. Paulere De Lara, the composer, said he was a friend both of Calmette and the Calmettes.

He testified that, a short time before the shooting, he, Mme. Calmette and Mme. Estradere, former society editor of "Le Figaro," were guests of the Princess De Monico at luncheon, and heard Mme. Estradere tell of Calmette's efforts to secure documents against Calmette, adding, "it is simply heart breaking."

De Lara gave it as his opinion that Mme. Estradere left "Le Figaro" on account of Calmette's attempt to induce her to arrange a meeting between himself and Calmette's divorced wife.

Said She Would Sue. "After Mme. Calmette had heard Mme. Estradere's story," said the witness, "she sighed and said 'they will finish by killing me.'

"I lunched with her the day after the 'Ton Jo' letter was published, which was two days before she killed Calmette," she was indignant, saying Calmette had turned his political campaign against herself and her husband into a personal one. She told me of her fears and said she meant to take legal action against Calmette. I am convinced she had no idea of using violence. When I left she said she would see me Monday evening at the Italian embassy dinner.

"And Monday she killed Calmette," Mme. Chartran, widow of the famous painter, was the next witness but her case was without any important bearing on the trial, though she gave the lie to Mme. Calmette, who had stated that the widow used her influence with Editor Leon Bailly of "Le Intransigent," an afternoon newspaper, to prevent publication of certain of the Calmette's letters.

France Deschaux, at one time Calmette's chief of cabinet, testified that just before the minister's second marriage, Andrew Vervoort a "Bill Bins" reporter, told the witness that a campaign was on foot against Calmette and gave him various details of which Deschaux made notes, with the written comment: "Possible scandal at wedding."

He told Calmette of this interview with Vervoort, Deschaux said, informing him: "That means the stolen letters."

First Wife a Witness. Mme. Gueylian, Calmette's former wife, was also among today's witnesses. To every one's surprise and despite the fact that "Le Figaro" published one of the letters she admitted having stolen from her husband and the witness denied that she had anything to do with the publication.

She corroborated Calmette's story of CATTLE PRICES, THE RECORD. Portland, Ore., July 22.—Cattle today reached the highest price on record for summer months when steers sold at $7.30. Owing to the high prices prevailing in the eastern markets, northwest holdings of cattle are being shipped to Missouri river points.

Daddy's Bedtime Story

A Fashionable Tournament In Animal Land.

They Were Interesting Players.

THE children had been to see a tennis tournament during the afternoon, and they were full of the wonderful playing they had seen. Of course they had to tell daddy all about it, but daddy thought that he had a much nicer tournament to tell them about.

"What sort of a tournament was it?" asked Jack.

"It was a tennis tournament, just like the one you saw this afternoon, but I think the players in the tournament I saw were more interesting."

"Who played in the tournament you saw, daddy?" asked Evelyn.

"Oh, no!" said daddy. "You certainly wouldn't call children interesting players, would you?"

Both the children laughed heartily at that, for they knew daddy thought children were quite the nicest and most interesting things that ever happened.

"My players were real players," continued daddy, "and I don't believe you will ever guess who they were."

"Rabbits," said Jack. "They ought to be good players, as they are so quick."

"My players were hardly what you might call good players, but they were interesting players. No; I don't believe you could possibly guess, so I will have to tell you. The toads played against the frogs."

"In the first place, there was a large audience present. The frogs and toads had heard that tennis tournaments were the fashion in the summer."

"Really you probably are surprised at such unfashionable looking creatures caring so much for fashion, but then that often is the way. They love to do the right thing at the right time, and they had a special place for the tournament, with a grand stand of nice, big, round logs."

"All the onlookers were dressed in their best. The frogs were principally dressed in emerald green, for that is a color which they consider very becoming. The toads were shaded brown costumes for the most part, though some of them wore very fine speckled black suits."

"The players were two toads and two frogs. They played doubles, you see, for they had heard that every nice player always had a special partner. They went straight into the finals, too, for they said that they must have the excitement right away."

"During the game the players stopped to drink lemonade, and the onlookers had refreshments all the time. Somehow they thought it was very appetizing to watch tennis, and they kept nibbling at the things to eat and sipping the lemonade steadily."

"The toads won the tournament and received five stone cups for prizes."
