PREDICTS WOLVERTON WILL BE OVERRULED

Portland, Ore., July 28.—Making his closing argument before the jury in the trial of his client, J. W. Logan, together with E. J. Sellers and W. F. Minard on charge of conspiring to fraudulently use the mails in locating settlers on forfeited Oregon and California railroad grant lands, Attorney J. C. Dennis of Tacoma predicted today that the supreme court of the United States would reserve Federal Judge Wolverton's forfeiture ruling in the big case.

In that event, Dennis asserted, every one of the persons that Logan placed on these lands would get their title, as it had been represented to them by the defendants that they would.

Arguments in the case will be concluded late this afternoon. Following Judge Beau's instructions, the case will probably be in the hands of the jury tonight, and attorneys expected a verdict tomorrow.

Bernard D. Townsend, former attorney for the government in the railroad litigation Dennis accused of needless dillying in prosecuting the case, and asserted that it should have entirely been closed up in two years instead of dragging through six years and still remain open.

Those interested in the passage of the Rivers and Harbors bill that is now before Congress but the passage of which is hanging in the balance have called a meeting in Portland for Thursday evening, July 30, to discuss the matter of bringing pressure to bear on the members of congress for its passage.

It is felt that on account of money for appropriations for Oregon waterways that is tied up in the bill that it is of vital importance to Oregon that the measure go through the national house. The Portland chamber of commerce asks Salem to send a delegation to attend the conference.

Should the bill fail to pass it is felt that Oregon would be seriously injured and all efforts toward helping it along are to be made. It is probable that a representative of the Salem Commercial club will go down to Portland on that date.
