SCHOOL DISTRICTS CANNOT RUN STORES

School districts may not establish and operate co-operative book stores for the purpose of providing the pupils with books at cost according to the opinion handed down by Attorney General Crawford this morning. The opinion was made at the request of Supt. Churchill who received the inquiry from M. D. Baker, clerk of District number 91 at Butte Falls.

The decision was given on the grounds that while a co-operative book store was not expressly prohibited by law there were no provisions of the law under which the store might be established. The school district is established by law for educational purposes and no provisions are made for commercial enterprises.

In his letter to Mr. Churchill, Mr. Crawford quotes from the school laws as follows:

"A board of directors can exercise no other powers than those expressly granted on which are necessarily implied from those granted." Again "A school district generally a body corporate and authorized to transact all business appertaining to schools and school houses within the district, can exercise no powers beyond those expressly conferred by statute or by necessary implication arising therefrom."

DEVISING PLANS TO RAISE REVENUE

European War Stopping Imports Cuts
Down Revenues Probably $150,000.
600—War Tax Will Be Necessary.

Washington, Aug. 13.—Congressional leaders conferred today with Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo regarding plans to make up the deficit in revenue caused by the European war. It was understood that it had been practically decided to increase the taxes on tobacco and distilled liquor.

Representative Underwood, leader of the house majority, and Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, were expected to meet with President Wilson and discuss plans to offset the falling off of revenue.

It was expected that a war tax bill will be presented to the house next week. It will have right of way over all other business. Its passage by the senate within a month was predicted.

Statistics presented by Secretary McAdoo indicated that the revenue loss as a result of the war will be at least $100,000,000 annually and perhaps $170,000,000.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 13.—Investigation of the rapid rise here of prices of foodstuffs since the beginning of the European war is in progress today by order of the city council.

Within the last week sugar has advanced $2 per 100 pounds, lemons $1 per box and various commodities from 10 to 20 per cent. The council ordered the investigation after a majority of its members had expressed the belief that the war is being used as an excuse to raise many prices it should not directly affect.

FINE DINNER AND BETTER SPEECHES AT CLUB MEETING

The regular monthly get-together dinner of the Board of Governors of the Commercial Club was served and surrounded at the Marion last night and was the very finest yet both in the way of menu, which ranged from salads through solids to the incarnadine loganberry pie and juicy crimson watermelon followed by scratching antelopes and the heaven ascending smoke.

This was the part of the affair that appealed to appetite, but with it was a flow of good sensible talk on several matters. Harley O. White, of the Board of Governors, presided, and did it gracefully and with much tact and aplomb, whatever that is.

C. E. Arney, promotion or immigration agent for the Northern Pacific, spoke at some length but forcibly as to the benefits to be derived from influx of population, and the necessity of steady effort to keep the resources and attractions of Oregon before the people of the middle West especially, but also before the whole country. He pointed out that western Oregon had never grown as it should, and while not attempting to give all the reasons why, suggested that it was largely due to two causes—lack of steady and enthusiastic boosting work on the part of valley people, and partly (especially of recent years) to the high price of lands that made their requirement by the newcomer, unless he was pretty well fixed, an impossibility. He described the methods used by his company in getting settlers located along its lines and said that his company would gladly process any products grown in the valley, and display them properly labeled with name of grower and location in all parts of the United States where its agents visited, and would do this free, besides those having samples of fruits or anything else for display could send the same to the company at Spokane free of charge through the Northern Express company. He suggested that every Oregonian going east should load up on information about the state and all parts of it, so that he would be able to handout correct and detailed information when asked about it, which he would find would be frequently.

He Spoke of Roads.

He was heartily applauded and was followed by State Highway Engineer Bowley, who spoke on what the state was doing in the way of road building. A fine road was being built in Jackson county from the California line to a short distance north of Central Point. The $500,000 raised by that county would complete about 30 miles of road. Twelve miles are graded and this part of the work will be done by November, and the road completed next summer. He also described what the other counties that bonded have done, and stated the state had charge of nearly a million and three quarters dollars donated by counties which it was expending in said counties. He also spoke of the effort the state was making to standardize the steel bridges in the state, and said there were about 30 such bridges now under construction. This would save the counties large sums, as it was found "the bridge companies did poor work for good pay or good work for double pay," and this would be changed and the counties would be able to get bridge work done at fair rates under the new plan. He spoke at considerable length as to the benefits that would be derived from first-class roads, and said the money left in the country by tourists was as near "velvet" as any that could be placed in that class. He also described the steel bridge he saw and said it was necessary that a new one be built. The present bridge is unsafe, and while it may last a year or two, or even more, yet it had reached a stage where it was liable to go at any time. The life of a bridge is like that of a person, he said, in that while it can be seen that the end is near, no one can foretell just when death will happen. His remarks were interesting from start to finish, and the diners showed their appreciation "audibly."

Lawmaker Speaks.

The toastmaster then introduced Mr. U'ren, independent candidate for governor, whom the audience generously gave a hearty welcome and then did some more. He said he wanted to make an open free confession at the start. He had noticed the other candidates for the governorship had, according to their statements, been just naturally forced to get into the race by their friends. "It was not that way in my own initiative" (he smiled as he used the word) "and not only has no one asked me to run, but I do not even know if very many or even want me to run." He went on to say that this country had not now and never had a representative form of government. Denmark, Tasmania, the French republic, none of the governments started after ours had used our form as a pattern. He did not say where they were any better for this, but seemed to think that was sufficient demonstration that our system was wrong. He also said many people did not think the people were capable of self government and then, although he did not intend so doing, showed that he was of that number, for he wanted to show them and to have his plans adopted by them instead of the present system. He said he as well as others wanted the senate abolished. His main argument, however, was concerning proportional representation, which he described as to its workings in detail, and of the system of taxation in vague and proposed. Mr. U'ren speaks fluently and has his subjects well digested. His presentation of his views is interesting even though not convincing. He spoke for half an hour, and was the last speaker of the evening. In concluding he said he was coming around next year with petitions for changing and reorganizing the state and county offices so that a hundred cents expended would get a hundred cents in value returned. The dinner was, of course, excellent, since it was served at the Marion. The speakers were all interesting and the cigars burned with a sympathetic gentleness as though they were really sorry for the fellows who smoked them on so hot a night, for that is what it was. That the crowd, which was not large because of that same heat, stayed until the end is a high compliment to the speakers, for it was a "get out doors and stay out" kind of a show.

WOMEN CAN PICK HOPS BUT NINE HOURS A DAY

Girls However Can Work as Many Hours as They Choose and Their Mothers Can Act as Chaperones.

Adult women may later in the hop season pick hops a day is the opinion handed down by Attorney General Crawford today. However girls do not come under this ruling and unless the Industrial Welfare commission makes another ruling the young ladies may remain in the yards and pick hops as long as they wish to after their mothers have sent. There is no ruling yet discovered though which will prevent the mothers from remaining in the yards as chaperones.

Men men of this county asked Labor Commissioner regarding the working hours for women in the hop fields and he a terse general to whom the question was submitted gave it as his opinion that the ruling Number 5 of the Industrial Welfare Commission would apply to this case. This ruling provides that experienced adult women workers may labor but 9 hours per day and 74 hours per week but makes no provision for girls.

The average working day in the hop yard of this district is probably even less than 9 hours as in most of the yards the pickers are not permitted to work after 4 in the afternoon. The 9 hours as a usual thing are fully by this time if the hop yards are provided with full crews and there is little indication of any shortage of pickers this year.

RAILROAD OFFICIAL KILLED IN CHICAGO

Chicago, Aug. 13.—The police were still without a clue today to the identity of the person who killed Secretary E. P. Amory of the Western Railroad association.

Amory's stenographer arrived at his office at her usual hour Wednesday but could not get in. Late in the afternoon the office was entered by C. A. Thompson, an attendant at the building, and the railroad man's corpse was found.

Death was caused by two deep cuts on the head. The confusion in the office indicated Amory had made a desperate fight.

The police took impressions of Thompson's finger tips but owned they had nothing against him.

Did somebody say something about the barbarous, bloodthirsty Mohammedan!

hop market yesterday, and a sale of 238 bales of Yakima hops, 1913 crop, at 15 cents was reported. Besides there were contracts made on 85,000 pounds of Yakima hops at the same prices. Both deals were made by the firm of McNeff Bros., the sale being made by the Moxee company, of North Yakima, and the contracts were executed with Moses Sampson, A. Sauve and H. B. Seauder, growers of that district.

The market yesterday was thought to be advancing, and it was predicted that sales at 16 cents would be made soon. Orders are said to be coming in from the East, and the continued dry weather in the Oregon and Washington hop districts is curtailing the output.

It is stated that it is now almost too late for rain to help the hop crop. Picking will commence in some districts in another week. The extremely dry season has had a bad effect on the hop yield, shortening the life of the vines and maturing the crop, as well as greatly reducing the total yield.

After a trip through the Salem and Independence hop district this week, a conservative dealer yesterday made a new low estimate of the Oregon crop, basing his figure on what he saw for himself and learned from well informed dealers and growers. He estimates the 1914 yield as low as 100,000 bales, as against 151,000 last season.

It was found that bottom lands, that up to three weeks gave every appearance of producing 2000 pounds to the acre, will yield only from 1200 to 1400 pounds. This tremendous shrinkage is due to the continued dry weather. It is said if no rain falls between now and the time of picking this estimate may be reduced still more.

Cables received yesterday brought the news that practically no hops will be imported into England from Germany, and this deficit will have to be made up from America. The English market is advancing, and as it is regarded as doubtful that the Continental crop will be harvested, New York dealers anticipate that New York's crop will sell at 50 cents a pound.

All this has a very bullish effect on Oregon hops, and yesterday both foreign and domestic dealers were offering 15 cents freely for the Oregon crop. However, growers were not disposed to sell, seeming to prefer to wait until after the harvest, when they expect Oregon hops will be in great demand.
