Through a mistake of the jailer of the Portland police station, a man by the name of Lee was brought to the insane asylum yesterday, by Special Attendant Algeo, instead of J. Eckert, who had been regularly committed and who Algeo was sent for. When Attendant Algeo presented himself at the police station to receive his ward the jailers were in the act of changing shifts, and the jailer who was going on shift, not knowing Eckert, went to the department set aside for insane prisoners and called out for Eckert. "My name's Eckert," piped up Lee, who occupied one of the cells, and he was bundled out and brought to Salem by the attendant, who was none the wiser, and the mistake was not discovered until Lee was missed by the police department at Portland some hours later. When the blunder was found out Eckert was sent up to the asylum, and in order to save the expense of sending Lee back to Portland he was examined for commitment, so will be examined at the insane asylum today. Needless to say Lee's insanity is self-evident.

"Arizona" drew another crowded house last night, and it is perhaps needless to add, delighted each and every one who saw it. In some respects the play was better presented than on the first night, which is quite natural, as those taking part had molded into their parts more firmly from the first night's experience. The play was in a way a revelation as it disclosed a notable lot of local talent, most of which was unsuspected, the actors and actresses not having appeared on the public stage before. "Arizona" will long be remembered by all who saw it.
A bill for $1923.11, presented to the county court of this county by a Portland firm of expert accountants for services rendered in checking up the accounts of the county officers of Marion county, will be ignored by the county court because it was not authorized by the department of Insurance Commissioner Ferguson, according to information received from that department today. Mr. Warren, of the insurance department, stated this morning that the bill had never passed through the state office and that the accountants had exceeded their authority in taking the matter up direct with the county court. Mr. Warren stated that no such bill would be passed by the department and that it should be ignored until it came through the proper channels.
