the intervention of Jack's grandfather, F. M. Rodfield, during one round, and his mother, during another round, Jack would probably have suffered serious consequences. As it is, Jack is nursing a sprain stretch extending down his forehead and ending abruptly over his left eye. Jack, it seems, had been chasing the rooster. It further seems that the said rooster resented the same.

Wounded Carried Miles To Hospital

house, where the first aid men were on duty. There would be nothing but straw for him to lie upon. The first aid men would dash cold water into his face, wash his wounds and bind them as best they could. Then the wounded man would lie on the straw until nightfall, for it was necessary to carry him through the firing zone to get back to the infirmary, which was another little house in a town a mile distant. He would either be wheeled along the tow path of the canal on a stretcher made of two baby carriages which were connected by a board, or a "charon" would carry him in an old boat. "Charon" was an old French peasant with long white whiskers. His boat was floored with straw because he carried the only mat during the mile journey down the canal. We used to call him "charon" and we named the canal the Styx. At the infirmary there were real surgeons, but they were pressed with work, and they were forced, of necessity, to an improvised operating room. If the wounded man were still alive, by this time, he would be put into a red cross wagon or automobile or some other sort of a vehicle and carried 30 miles to a large town (which I cannot, for obvious reasons, name), and here he would be put on the next Red Cross train and started for Paris. His bed in the train might be a seat in a third, second or first-class coach; or, if he was lucky, it might be a sheeted bed in a regular Red Cross car.

At last his train will pull into Paris or into some other distant city of France, where there are big hospitals. Scores of ambulances will be waiting in the railroad yards. The ambulance attendants will be running around, each seeking out the wounded who are to be assigned to the hospital which he represents. To them he is only a number, or perhaps a chalk mark on the door of the car. They will put him on a stretcher, place him in a huge motor ambulance, perhaps with one or two other men who have been wounded on distant battlefields, and the car will race through the streets of the city to the hospital, which once seemed to the sufferer so many miles away, and where warm, white coats, gentle nurses, flowers and no responsibility await him. It is no wonder that the wounded men who reach the hospital yards sink back onto the pillows with a sigh of relief and smile when they catch the first glimpse of the white nurses. Look back at the journey he has taken since that moment he was hit in the trenches and you can understand how a hospital ward looks like heaven to a wounded soldier.

To get into a hospital is one of a soldier's dreams, and there are strict laws in all armies against men wounding themselves. In the French army this self-wounding is known as "mutilation," and the punishment is death. In our regiment an ex-convict who had been released after serving 15 years in order to permit him to enter the army, persuaded another soldier to shoot him through the hand. In return for this favor he also murdered the lieutenant soldier. When they came to their wounds dressed, the lieutenant soldier powder marks on their hands, and the truth came out, the men were executed.
