Western Oregon Valleys Seem To Hide No Oil

Reported Seeps of Both Oil and Gas Are All Examined in Vain for Paying Indications, says Geologist.

The chance of getting oil in commercial quantities in western Oregon is very slight, according to W. C. Washburne, a University of Oregon graduate in geology, of the class of 1905 who has made a report to the United States geological survey. Mr. Washburne has described all reported seeps of oil and gas, and gives an account of his research work by counties.

He says many seeps of oil have been reported from practically every western Oregon county, but that most of the material described as oil proved on investigation to be merely oxide, a substance that when present in water in minute amounts forms an irridescent scum that looks much like an oil film. His report says in part:

"In some places in western Oregon the rocks contain tiny globules of oil, and in others they are cut by veins of solid, brittle oil residue, but nowhere is liquid oil known to seep out at the surface. The solid residues indicate only that oil was at one time present in the rocks, but it does not necessarily mean that oil occurs in quantity in rocks at the present time. The absence of oil seeps is the most discouraging feature in this field, for the rocks are so broken that it seems highly improbable that much oil could occur in them and still not leak out at the surface and form seeps. The possibility of obtaining oil by drilling is regarded as slightly favorable in places in Coos, Douglas, Lincoln and Lane counties, but even there the chances are not good."

A careful study of all the known occurrences of gas in western Oregon shows that the chances for getting commercial quantities are no better than for oil, adds Mr. Washburne.

A WOMAN DOCTOR

says, "Eugenics is a necessary factor in the future of the race. The average American girl is unfit for motherhood." This may be true, but if weak and ailing girls passing from girlhood to womanhood would only rely, as thousands do, upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—that simple remedy made from roots and herbs—to restore the system to a normal healthy condition, it would cause many ills from which they suffer to disappear, so that motherhood might become the joy of their lives.
