The Sunday school board of the Leslie Methodist church met at the home of Professor and Mrs. Edwin Sherwood Monday evening, Mrs. J. B. Ulrich, Miss Grace Sherwood and Mason Bishop presiding as hosts. An enjoyable social hour was passed, and plans made for the annual Sunday school picnic, which will take place shortly after the closing of school, and also for the program to be given children's day, June 20.

Mrs. Rozella Bates, who has been passing several weeks in Salem, and her uncle, O. M. Whitney, who has also been here in the interest of a California supply company, received a telegram calling them to Oakland this morning, and they planned to return today. Mrs. Bates has made many friends in Salem during her brief stay, and has spoken before numerous audiences here on various subjects. She was to address the students of Willamette university this morning in company with ladies of the Woman's Relief Corps on Memorial day, and was also scheduled to appear on the Memorial day program at the Unitarian church Sunday evening.

James Canning, recorder of Baker City, Ore., has been in the city the last few days, taking the state bar examination and visiting Rev. A. Turner. They are both members of Alpha Tau Omega fraternity at the state university at Eugene.

Commencement at the Indian training school was not so largely attended this year as ordinarily, the disagreeable condition of the weather, no doubt, having much to do with the small outside attendance. Among those attending the graduation exercises Thursday were Mrs. Roma Hunter and her daughter, Miss Myrtle, who were entertained by Mrs. James Swabala.

TWIN BOYS BORN TO SECRETARY AND MRS. OLCOTT THIS MORNING

Old Dr. Stork Unusually Kind to Lord and Lady of State Department

BORN—At the family home, No. 925 Cheneketa street, Salem, Oregon, Friday, May 28, 1915, at 9:45 a. m., to Mr. and Mrs. Ben W. Olcott; two bouncing boys.

"Well, what do you know about that?" exclaimed one state official when he heard the joyful tidings from the domicile of Secretary of State Ben W. Olcott, this morning. "What chance have the rest of us got when he starts in to flood the country with voters like that!"

"Well, he'll have to go some more if he comes within speaking distance of my record," chortled remarked Judge Thos. P. Ryan, chief assistant to State Treasurer Kay. Triplets were born to Judge and Mrs. Ryan upon the third visitation of Dr. Stork to their household. "But then, for only the second offense," the judge soliloquized, "he is doing the first rate."

The offices and corridors of the state house were buzzing with suppressed excitement along about 10 o'clock this morning, or a very few moments after the news became whispered about that Secretary of State Olcott was the father of boy twins, and Secretary Olcott, himself, was trying his best to appear unconcerned, as though it were a mere matter of every day occurrence at his house, under the trying circumstances. To say that he is proud would be to express it mildly but Ben has hardly had time to fully recover from the shock and it is difficult to forecast what his actions will be when he comes back to earth again. At any rate he ordered a box of El Sidelos delivered at the state house at noon.

This makes the third boy to have been delivered to Mr. and Mrs. Olcott, the first, Chester Wallace, having arrived two years ago. When seen this morning Ben said that names had not been chosen for the new arrivals. As a matter of fact, he said, it was such a complete surprise that they were wholly unprepared for it. They might have been able to announce the name for one boy, but two—well, it simply meant the calling together of another family consultation and going over the whole list again to select the second choice in names. When seen at noon today Ben stated that, according to latest advices, the returns were complete and that Mrs. Olcott and the future governors and secretaries of state were in a fine state of health and getting along nicely.

"Instead of buying one hot water bottle nowadays I have to buy them in pairs," smilingly remarked Secretary Olcott when met on his way home from town this noon.

QUEENER SCHOOL CLOSSES.

Last Friday, May 21, closed the 8 month term for the Queener school which was very successfully taught by Miss Jennie DeBord. There have been 36 pupils enrolled, but several of that number have moved away during the term. Out of the 22 in attendance at the close of school, 20 have finished their grade work and have been promoted to the next grade.

The four sixth grade students passed the state examination in physiology with grades above 80, and the two seventh grade students both passed in geography with grades above 80. Of the three eighth grade pupils who tried for diplomas, two, Margaret Schaefer and Roy Follis, received theirs and the other member of the class failed only in two studies.

This ought to show that the term's work has been a success, since practically all of those in regular attendance made the required grades.

On Friday afternoon a short program was rendered by the pupils. It consisted of recitations, dialogues and music. After the program the school board, teacher, pupils and parents enjoyed a social hour together.

As an enjoyable close for the term work, the young people of the community, under the supervision of Miss Jennie DeBord, gave a play, "The Girl from the L. Triangle Ranch," which was well attended. The players were: Roy Follis, George Schlies, Martin Hensley, Jess Chastine, Elmer Yoman, Luther Cole, Lloyd Christman, Weibe Keoken, Lester Lewis, Bertha Schaefer, Melva Chastine, Margaret Schaefer and Marie Leffer. Music was furnished between acts by Messrs. Kerber and a song, "San Antonio," by a male quartet by the players. Everyone seemed to enjoy it and the young people received much praise for their work of the evening.—Stryton Mail.

PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES DELIVERED AT W. U.

R. C. Halley Says Militarism Should Tend To Constructive Arts

Erie P. Bolt read before the student body of Willamette this morning a message from Sedgewick Post No. 10 of the G. A. R. The message was one containing the thought that certain inherent liberties had been given to all Americans and that these should be maintained. The Post expressed itself as opposed to militarism and its methods of securing results. The terrible effects of the Civil war were enumerated and a contrast was drawn with what could be expected in Europe at the close of the present war. The memorable Gettysburg address of Abraham Lincoln was revised slightly and given as the Americans' creed of international ethics.

Several members of the G. A. R. and W. R. C. were present on the platform and R. C. Halley, one of the number, addressed the students, stating that he would like to see Willamette students organize a company and wear the blue uniforms, although he did not expect to see any complications arise in which our country would participate, yet he foresaw that all of the great works of the future were to be done by the government under the military regime of the war department. He quoted specific examples of the Panama canal, Cello canal, irrigation projects, harbor and river development, construction of public highways. Hence those who would arise to prominent places were those who were in the military department. A great tribute was paid to woman suffrage. The speaker stated that in a few years women would control the public offices, and that the office positions now held by men would revert to women. Men must turn to constructive works for national development.

years of experience in organization work, had he witnessed such unalloyed and commendable enthusiasm and determination as that which has characterized the work throughout in this city, and, in proportion to population, never before had such remarkable success been achieved. He acknowledged that, from the lack of encouragement and the discouraging reports he had received at the outset, he did not believe that more than 500 members could be secured in Salem and he frankly admitted that he was pleased and surprised more than it was possible for him to express.

As a result of today's canvass D. W. Eyre's committee carried off highest honors with a total of 29½ members.

New First Sea Lord May Not Change Britain's Naval Policy

(By J. W. T. Mason, Former European Manager of the United Press.)

New York, May 28.—The appointment of Admiral Sir Henry Jackson as first sea lord of the British navy does not mean that there is to be an essential change of policy. Jackson owes the post to the resignation of Lord John Fisher, who committed the unpardonable sin of leaving in a rage before final action was taken on his resignation.

His passing emphasizes the strength of his will combined with an error of judgment. Fisher, who was a strictly subordinate civil head of the admiralty, tried to make himself the Kitchener of the navy. Unfortunately his efforts came when Kitchener's dictatorial authority was being overthrown. Having at last put Kitchener in his place the government did not intend to permit Fisher to become a new irresponsible so he was not recalled to his vacant desk. Churchill acted oppositely. Instead of running off and sulking, he handed in his resignation and remained at his post until his successor was chosen. He accepted without a murmur the chancellorship of the Duches of Lancaster, the least important position in the cabinet, a position administering certain of the king's properties.

Churchill's willingness to accept loyally whatever position the government desired will react in his favor. Thus he has probably saved his political future. Under the new regime there is to be no scandal such as the constant disputing between Churchill and Fisher. But otherwise, it is hard to see what Balfour and Jackson can do that has not been done before. The two prime accomplishments are: That German commerce has been ended and troop supplies, being ferried to France, are secure against submarine attack.

Five Murderers Reprieved

then, were all the evidences of agitation they manifested.

Meanwhile, behind closed doors, the state board of pardons held its final session, considering the many appeals that have been made for reprieves. Secretary Bryan's request that the sentences be commuted, as a favor to General Francisco Villa, was also considered. The meeting was secret, but loud talking could be heard outside the barred doors.

Dr. Albert Villa Vuzaria, personal representative of Villa, made a strong appeal to Warden Sims and the pardon board. It was believed at the prison that the pardon board would refuse to intercede.

Despite this Warden Sims said repeatedly that he thought there would be no executions. The tension was high and increased with every minute.

A few minutes before the time fixed for the first killing the suspense was mirrored in the faces of all at the prison. Pallid faces and trembling hands were seen everywhere. People spoke in hoarse whispers.

It was rumored that, if the hangings took place, Mexicans across the border would attack Americans as reprisals for the death of their countrymen. There was no verification of this. But the big colony of Mexicans in Phoenix was reported to be uneasy.

Persons arriving at Florence from Phoenix declared, that as the time for the executions approached, crowds assembled around the bulletin boards there, sullenly waiting. There was considerable muttering, but no organized effort to make a demonstration. Several hundred telegrams, appealing for mercy for the condemned, were received by the prison board today.

From Tucson came a dispatch saying that Judge Sawtelle then was hearing the application for writs of habeas corpus in the presence of an immense throng.
