Charming Scene from "Omar The Tentmaker" at the Grand Tonight

There is every indication at the box office of the Grand opera house that a capacity audience will be in attendance tonight to witness Guy Bates Post in Richard Walton Tully's spectacular Persian romance, "Omar, the Tentmaker." This is the third play by Mr. Tully to score a sensational success, its predecessors being "The Bird of Paradise" and "The Rose of the Rancho," both of which are pleasantly recalled by all theatergoers. "Victoriously," "Omar, the Tentmaker," is an epoch-making achievement, and has established a new high water mark for lavish and picturesque stage adornment in this country. Nothing more beautiful than the succession of magnificent Oriental pictures disclosed during the performance has ever graced the local stage. With infinite fidelity the producer, Mr. Tully himself, has succeeded in reproducing the fascinating charm and allurements of old Persia. The colorful life of the narrow streets with their huddled, silk-laden bazaars, quaint taverns and busy peddlers' shops has been faithfully depicted, while by way of restful contrast a rose-bordered, bird-filled garden at sunset is transferred intact to the stage.

In weaving a play around the life, times and Ruhayyat of Omar Khayyam, the beloved Persian poet of the eleventh century, Mr. Tully has laid particular stress upon the vaulting career of the "sweet singer of red wine and the rose." With the interest in Omar's life-life constantly maintained, Mr. Tully has also introduced a compact series of thrilling vignettes, sudden deaths, high sacrifices, deep plotlines and poetic reveries that are calculated to evoke enthusiasm from even the most casual theatergoer. The lover of the Ruhayyat—whose numbers are legion wherever the English language is spoken—note with delight that many of the most popular of Khayyam's quatrains are naturally introduced during the course of the play's dialogue.

In the title role Mr. Post is giving the most significant interpretation of his career, and one to which he brings to bear his ripest and best talents. The part is one of the stuporific difficulties, and that Mr. Post has won for himself such critical praise is a great compliment to his histrionic ability. Surrounding Mr. Post is the same original company of nearly 100 who supported him during his lengthy metropolitan engagement.

BUILD HARD SURFACE ROAD.
Roadmaster Waldo J. Finn is busily engaged in making preparations for some substantial road improvements during the present season, some of which are already under way in different parts of the county. Probably the most important project in contemplation is the way of permanent work in the hard surfacing of a mile of highway out of Independence, which will be performed largely for experimental purposes with a view to extending this character of improvement to other parts of the county. If this concrete road proves satisfactory the plan is to construct a like roadway between Dallas and Independence, then to Salem via Independence, and eventually on other principally traveled highways of the county.—Independence Monitor.
