Type of National Heroes Is Shown by High Decorations

By Wilbur S. Forrest.

(United Press staff correspondent.)

London, Sept. 3.—(By mail.)—The type of men that are becoming national heroes in England's greatest war is exemplified today in the story of the adventurous career of Midshipman George L. Drewry, of London, who has been decorated with the Victoria Cross for valor at the Dardanelles.

Not yet of age, Drewry's brief twenty years have been packed with thrills that rival the most romantic heroes of Marryat's tales of the sea. He has sailed the world around, had thrilling rescues from watery graves and has been shipwrecked on a desert isle, but no finer story of heroism has been told during the war than his conduct while disembarking troops from the steamship River Clyde off Gallipoli peninsula.

The young midshipman was placed in charge of a flat boat at 5 a. m. on the memorable day of the landing of the British expeditionary force against the Turks. From the side of the River Clyde the vessel which was later run ashore to facilitate the landing of soldiers from a hole cut in its plates, he steered straight toward Cape Helles in the face of a furious fire, to beach his craft where, with others, it would act as a landing stage for the soldiers. Behind him came the River Clyde. As the transport crunched its bow on the sandy shore, Drewry's lighter hit the beach at her port bow. Jumping ashore with a hauser he secured the small craft and went to the aid of Captain Dawin who by this time had jumped into the water in an effort to place another lighter. Both, despite machine guns and shrapnel, escaped death by inches but were unable at once to accomplish their task. Drewry leaped aboard a lighter and then into the water again to assist a wounded soldier. He then threw away his revolver, coat and hat and went back to the aid of the captain.

Shortly afterward a bit of shrapnel struck the youth on the head, knocking him down. He was carried aboard the River Clyde, his wound dressed, and he immediately rushed back to the aid of Captain Dawin. With a rope in his teeth he swam to other lighters and fastened them to the grounded craft. Twice he executed this feat under sniping fire until rescued completely exhausted.

The story of Drewry's gallantry at the Dardanelles drew the story of his other adventures from his father and mother in London today. He left school at the age of sixteen, joined the Mercantile Marine and was apprenticed aboard the Indian Empire, a large London sailing ship. An incident of his first year at sea was a fall from a high mast into the sea. He was rescued with difficulty. This incident was nothing compared to the adventure which befell him later.

While sailing around Cape Horn in the Indian Empire a storm arose and the vessel was wrecked on a desert island. A heavy sea literally washed the crew into a shallow bay, which was filled with seaweed. Swimming and crawling over the vegetable mass, the crew succeeded in reaching shore. For fourteen days they sustained existence on edible roots and shell fish and managed to hold out until rescued by a Chilean man-of-war.

After this in 1912, the youthful adventurer returned to England and was given an officer's berth on a merchant liner. Since then he has traveled all over the world, and happened to be in Port Said in July, 1913, when he joined the Royal Naval Reserve as a midshipman. In August, 1914, he was appointed to H. M. S. Egmont, guardship at Malta and later to the torpedo gunboat Hussar. Afterward he was transferred to the transport River Clyde.

He will be twenty-one years of age in November.
