STATE LIBRARY PROVES BOON TO THE ISOLATED

Selections of 50 Books Sent To Remote Districts Make Winter Cheerful

The state library is perhaps the most extensive traveler in Oregon. During the fiscal year ending October 1, the traveling library alone circulated 25,414 books and the majority of these were sent to country places where there is no library and where books are not to be found.

The 103,375 books in the Oregon state library are for the general public and any one may secure a book by writing the state librarian, Miss Cornelia Marvin. And not only may a book be sent to any part of the state, but the librarian and her corps of assistants are at the service of the public in selecting books on any special subject desired.

To aid the communities where books are scarce and not to be obtained, stations are established and books put up in units of 50 and shipped to these stations, to remain six months. A temporary librarian for the stations will be appointed upon the application of ten tax payers, or school district officers, and this library will cost only the transportation charges.

While the state library is doing very much good throughout the state and while the circulation is rapidly increasing, the librarian, Miss Marvin, feels there are thousands in the state who do not understand the benefits to be derived from the library, and the ease with which these books may be secured. A letter addressed to Miss Marvin always receives prompt attention.

Auto and Motorcycle Clash Together and Motorcycle Is Burned

A motorcycle ridden by Henry Vrooman, engineer at the Masonic temple, and an auto belonging to Albert Egan, but driven by Rolla Axley, clashed at the corner of State and High streets at about 10 o'clock last night and the motorcycle was almost a total wreck.

The fire department was called out and the gasoline blaze was put out. The auto was going east on State, according to Mr. Vrooman, and turned north on High street. Mr. Vrooman was going in the same direction and following close behind the machine and was unable to turn in time to prevent the car from running over him as he was on the left side of the car which also turned to that side.

Spokane Bridge Broke; Street Car Into River

Passengers of the second car rushed panic-stricken to the street. Within a very few minutes a great crowd had gathered around the approach to the bridge and on the bank of the river. Police had great difficulty in stretching lines and keeping back the excited mob.

Tugs and rowboats requisitioned by the police soon were at work above the wreckage. Many persons were pulled half conscious from the water, among them 12 who were taken to the emergency hospital.

The cause of the collapse of the bridge beneath the car could not be determined. It was stated that a thorough investigation would be made. Crash Came Without Warning.

According to persons on the second car, the car came with apparently no warning. There was no crash and no sound of grinding timber. The bridge apparently dropped beneath the weight of the car, which slid noiselessly through a great hole into the river.

A majority of the passengers were laborers on their way to work. Several working girls were aboard the car, but it was believed that all of these were saved.

The car which went into the river was being operated on the Astor street line. It had reached almost the exact center of the bridge and was running slowly when the middle span of the structure gave way.

As the car shot through the hole, it turned in the air, striking the water at right angles to the bridge. The conductor of the second car, on the Hillway street line, was warned by the sudden extinguishing of the lights of the first car and set his brakes. His car ground its way to the very brink of the gap in the bridge, tottered on the edge, and finally caught fast by its trucks, though tilting at a perilous angle.

Firemen with long ladders were able to reach the Astor car, and a piece of the flooring of the wrecked bridge. On the top of the car perched the motor man and conductor and eight passengers who had extricated themselves. Only the top of the car was above the water and the firemen were unable to save any of the passengers who failed to climb through the windows. One of the first of the injured to get out of the water was Walter Cleveland, who said:

All Went in River. The lights flashed out and everything went dark. The first thing that I knew we were in the river and I could feel the water coming up about my head. Some way I got out and onto a piece of the floor of the bridge. I seemed years until some one came. All the time I could hear groans and cries from the other passengers.

The New Brisco 38--Four Is Here at $850 in Salem

It looks more like a two or three thousand dollar machine. How is it possible to put out such a classy machine at so low a price? It is just this way: This car is designed and built by scientific car builders noted all over this country, France and Germany.

About the first of August this year they took two stock cars from the shops in Jackson, Mich., and raced them all over the Middle West and South winning all events from one mile standing and start to one hundred mile races, breaking many world's records.

When we have a horse that goes through the season and wins everything in the 2:05 class we say that he is a wonder, not any more so than a Briscoe Car that will stand and start and go a mile in 51 seconds and 100 miles in less than a minute, they both must have the stuff in them.

This car has a great many improvements that no other cars have. We can sell you a four cylinder car you take it and run it for thirty days and if you decide you want an eight cylinder car we will install an eight cylinder engine in the same body.

This car can be seen and demonstrated at 340 North Church street. You must see this car to appreciate its real worth.

WHAT DID THE KAISER SAY? BEVERIDGE WON'T TELL THEM

SENATOR BEVERIDGE AS FRENCH FRONT. GENERAL VON HINDENBURG - BEVERIDGE WITH GERMAN OFFICERS

What did the Kaiser say? That's what official Washington would like to know. Albert J. Beveridge, schooled in statecraft, through years of membership on the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate, talked with Emperor Wilhelm II. for two hours. But not a single word of what was said is known. American state department officials would like to know what the Kaiser said. He must have said much that might guide Secretary Lansing.

Lusitania with its cargo of American souls to the bottom of the Irish Sea, confided to the American statesman his ideas of fighting. Von Hindenburg, conqueror on the eastern war front, took time between attacks to unboast himself through Senator Beveridge to America.

Then Beveridge went to France. There he interviewed Gabriel Hanotaux, publicist, General Franchet d'Esperey and other great generals whose shells had been falling into the very German trenches Beveridge had so lately left. Then over to Great Britain where Viscount Bryce, Lord Newton, Charles Trevelyan, Bernard Shaw, Sir Gilbert Parker and others recited the real reasons why England went to war.

Senator Beveridge also tells, with graphic description, of how he and his party were "specially shelled," how men were blown to pieces before his very eyes and of the fatalistic attitude of men who knew they would be "the next." He tells of how the fighting men are no more concerned than if they were at ordinary day labor, how soldiers and officers, after a few days, "think no more of taking part in an artillery duel or trench fight than of plowing, bookkeeping or blacksmithing."

But the feature of the book attracting attention in Washington is the intimate inside views and thoughts of the men who are making the war—even the men who would make war on us, if the United States should become entangled. Senator Beveridge has recorded faithfully all that was said to him by these men. But on what the Kaiser said in his two-hour talk he is strangely silent.
