lected a few days ago as the new name for the Arto-Frisco drill team, did not seem to pronounce quite right to several of the members of the team. Relying on the privilege that a woman has of changing her mind, another meeting was called, and after due deliberation the young ladies in the team decided to name themselves "La Arto Club." Regardless of the name, they have the satisfaction of knowing that the Arto-Frisco club was, and the La Arto club is, the best drilled Artian team on the Pacific coast.

Jackson day, January 8, will be observed by the Ladd & Bush bank, following a custom of the bank, dating back more than 40 years. Along in the early '80's, it was customary for the bank to raise a flag on a flag pole standing at the intersection of Commercial and State streets. For many years following the battle of New Orleans, January 8, 1815, when General Andrew Jackson defeated the British, it was customary to observe the day, and in many southern states, it was a legal holiday. According to recent historians, the battle won by Jackson was the only fight during the war of 1812 in which the American troops acquitted themselves with honor. In many of the battles of that war, the American militia either ran away, or refused to fight. The battle was fought after peace had been declared.
