Conflicting Tendencies Mark Opening of Year, Says Clews

New York, Jan. 8.—(Special.)—The year opens with an extraordinary group of conflicting tendencies. Our home conditions are exceedingly satisfactory and thoroughly justify reasonable optimism. If we had nothing further to calculate upon than the effects of a good harvest, a satisfactory bank position and a substantial recovery in domestic trade, the outlook would be comparatively clear and even the doubts of a presidential year would not be overwhelmingly serious. But the great conflict across the sea is still raging and remains the one great dominating factor, injecting a series of grave uncertainties which unavoidably modify all other expectations.

It is axiomatic that war invariably creates new activities, high prices and general inflation. We are in the midst of just such movements as these at the present time, and they create a sense of prosperity which is not only transient but somewhat misleading and full of pitfalls and dangers. These dangers must be assiduously watched, if we are to escape them or minimize their penalties. Inflation is really by far the greatest of these hazards, and as a rule is based upon either unsound expansion of credit or exaggerated profits. Credit conditions in the United States already show an enormous expansion, though so far the danger limit appears to have been avoided, because our bankers have been fully alive to the risks in this direction. The chief source of inflation has been the bulging profits of a few industries whose earnings were enormously swollen by highly profitable war contracts. Fortunately, this danger seems to have been fully realized, and strong efforts have been made to restrain any further unwholesome speculation in these specialties. When the facts are taken into consideration, it is remarkable that a serious collapse has not been so successfully averted, and this must be credited to the wide margin of safety with which many of these war order enterprises have been financed.

Judge Gary recently issued a timely note of warning which was directed in another direction than war industries, and that was our foreign trade. Here indeed is a field in which prudence and thoughtfulness will be greatly needed. The war has profoundly disturbed our foreign commerce, stimulating it intensely in ways never anticipated. When peace comes, if not before, some of this activity will cease. There will be no more munition orders, and the problem then will be how far we can retain the regular trade gained from other countries during the war. Germany will undoubtedly make a heroic struggle for recovery, but her ability to export will be handicapped for an indefinite period by heavy taxation, by the loss of many skilled hands and by general inflation within her own territory. France and Belgium will be chiefly occupied with reconstruction. Great Britain will be better prepared for foreign trade than any other country, unless it be ourselves. The chances are then that for some time after peace is declared we will be able to hold our own in the export trade, especially if our bankers and industrial leaders succeed in preventing domestic inflation, which would close the door upon exports and invite serious home demeritizations. Of course, when peace does come, our foreign trade will have to go through another period of adjustment, but that should be less violent than what accompanied the opening of the war, and will be more easily met for the reason that the crisis will be over and all energies will be bent toward reconstruction. To a certain extent therefore Judge Gary is unduly pessimistic, and does not take into sufficient consideration the growing ability of the United States to meet foreign competition. Our industries are no longer in a state of infancy, and the corporation over which Judge Gary presides happens to be one of the greatest industrial giants the world has ever seen.

Weekly Report of Union Stock Yards

North Portland, Ore., Jan. 12.—In the face of a large run of 1350 head, the market began on an upward trend and choice grain fed steers sold at $7.90. Hay feeds sold a dime over last week, making the top $7.00. One feature of the market was that the bulk of the staff was the best seen for some time. Cows are going at good strong prices with all other lines in proportion.

Hogs

A good feeling with excellent quality and the market a nickel higher than the closing of last week's market bringing the top to the $6.90 mark is a very good way to express the situation at the North Portland yards. Bulk of swine went at $6.85. North Portland is but a nickel under the Chicago market today.

Sheep

A good run of sheep came forward over Sunday and lambs sold at $2.25. Ewes sold at $2.30 with all lines steadily stronger.
