EVERYBODY LOOKS AT GENEALOGICAL TREE

Sons of American Revolution to Organize Chapter in Salem

Now that the Daughters of the American Revolution have a strong organized chapter in Salem and the Sons of the American Revolution are preparing to form an Oregon chapter, a general interest is now being taken by many Salem people in their ancestors. In fact, according to Maud Cordelia Marvin, state librarian, the study of genealogy is now becoming quite popular and the state library is having calls daily from those who are interested in tracing their ancestry to the Revolutionary days.

For those who would like to know whether their family tree extends back to their great-grandfathers and whether said individuals served either as a soldier or sailor in the Revolutionary war, or gave aid and comfort to the Revolutionary forces, the first step is to consult at the state library the American and English Genealogies in the Library of Congress. This book will give a list of those whose genealogies have been prepared and are on record.

For those who wish to study genealogy, the first thing is to learn where one's ancestors lived. Each state in the east has records especially of the colonial period. Maine has a complete record of every soldier or sailor that served during the Revolutionary war. For those in Salem who are interested in the study of genealogy, the following books are on file at the state library: Boston, Selectmen's minutes and town records; Connecticut, Public records of the colony; Connecticut, Vital records; Delaware, Archives; Georgia, Colonial records; Revolutionary records; Maine, Historical society; vital records; York deeds; historical and genealogical records; Maryland, Archives; calendar of wills; Massachusetts, Records of Plymouth colony; vital records of 125 towns; New Jersey, Docum n's relating to colonial history; documents relating to revolutionary history; New York, Minutes of society for detecting and defeating conspiracies; Pennsylvania, Ecclesiastical records; minutes of the Provincial council; Rhode Island, Records of Rhode Island colony; vital records; military list from 1647 to 1850; Vermont, Records of the Governor and council; historical society; Virginia, Calendar of state papers; journal of the house of Burgesses; Rhode Island, Genealogical dictionary; New Jersey, Revolutionary lists; Pennsylvania, List of colonial governors; Maine, At Valley Forge; New York, Society Sons of the Revolution, year book, 1909.
