FIRST FLAX IN OREGON

By Charlotte Matheny Kirkwood, Pioneer of 1843.

The present flax agitation brings to my mind a fact not generally known at the present time.

In 1844 my mother planted flax seed in the Willamette valley. She had carried her seed bag across the plains. We called it her "treasure bag."

The result was a nice bed of flax, fairly good from which she gathered enough seed to sow half an acre. This trial crop was sown in Tualatin Plains, north of Hillsboro, and the present town of North Plains.

In the fall of '44 we moved, my father having bought the old Mission farm of Dr. David Leslie, 12 miles north of Salem, on the west side of the Willamette river.

A ferry was there, known as the "Mission Ferry." Later it took my father's name, and became known to all the old settlers as "Matheny's Ferry."

Here in the rich sandy loam of this bottom land she sowed her seed and harvested a crop from which she received quite a rich return. The crop was pulled, retted (as they called it) swunged and hauled and twisted into bales.

Mother had brought no wheel to spin it on, so it was laid away. During the next immigration a little flax wheel found its way across the continent. Mother heard of it, and sent her flax to its proud owner on the San Juan. It was spun into thread, and many a pioneer housewife was made happy by a "hank" of Oregon thread.

We also utilized the tow, hauled from the more choice lint, using it as padding for "comforts" and mattresses, thus softening several hard pioneer beds.

In all, there was a wagon load of fibre, and it made a huge lot of thread of blue-gray color, which was easily bleached. Mother knew how to handle flax, for she had woven many yards of fine linen before she came to Oregon from flax grown by herself.

The Oregon flax was longer and of finer quality than that grown in Kentucky, and I am ready to believe that it is superior to that grown elsewhere. No greater industry has developed from the little start made from the tiny packet of seeds my mother brought with her, but our climate and soil are so well adapted to its culture that I believe everyone should give encouragement to those who are endeavoring to establish flax production in our state on a large scale.—Oregon Voter.

INSURANCE MEETINGS
The Hop Growers' Fire Relief Association of Butteville held its annual meeting Tuesday, and chose the following director: Chas. Kuensting for three years and J. C. Murphy for two years. The hold over directors are John Murray, W. R. McKay and A. D. Yergon.

The Farmers Fire Relief meeting held yesterday and Chas. Kuensting was elected a director for two years, and Henry Zorn for one year. Those holding over are J. P. Feller and W. R. McKay.

Both directorates will probably meet Saturday and organize by choosing officers for the current year. Both companies had a good year in 1915, and are in excellent condition. The Hop Growers have not levied an assessment in many years, and the rate in the Farmers' is far below that of all old line and most of the Mutuals. The business of both associations has been conducted along most conservative and efficient lines in the real interest of the policy holders.—Aurora Observer.

Explosion In Flooring Plant Kills Many
Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 24.—In an explosion which wrecked the Kellner flooring plant today, many were injured and several are missing, according to early reports.

One dead body had been removed from the Kellner Blowing company at 2:30 o'clock and this was followed by the form of an unconscious girl with broken legs.

A second body was found soon afterward. The police estimated that 15 are missing and a score injured. Fire prevented rescuers from going into the interior of the plant.

Why are there no more romantic stories in the magazines of the great news books scored by the rub reported? Easy enough. The cub reporter has grown up.

Vessels Battle Storm and Come Through Safe

Honolulu, Wash., Jan. 24.—Battered and disabled from the heavy southwest Saturday, the steam schooner Centralia today is limping toward San Francisco under her own steam, with her four passengers and crew of twenty men safe.

But two of the vessels which spent all day Saturday searching for the Centralia are damaged. Wireless reports late last night said the steamer Admiral Seelye was disabled and another steamer is standing by her. The tanker F. H. Buck, too, reported that she had lost her steering gear off Coos bay.

The storm which swept the coast Saturday had spent itself today and marine men felt little fear for the Buck and the Seelye.

THIS EDITOR IS WRATHY
(Jefferson Review.)

A most contemptible piece of petty politics, or spite work, was the removal of W. A. Jones as secretary of the state fair board and the election of A. H. Lea of Portland, to succeed him. So disgusted with the rank work were President J. H. Booth and N. K. West that they immediately resigned as members of the board. Not a charge could be placed against Jones and the three members voting against him would give no reason therefor, though the action is plain enough.—Withycombe wanted the place for a Portland man. Jones was the best secretary the board ever had, and brought the 1915 fair out several thousand dollars to the good. No wonder he was fired. Such work as that will never do. It must come out behind, irrespective on receipts, so that the legislature may have an excuse to make a larger appropriation. Then Jones should have known that pet gatekeepers with a "pull" are not to be treated the same as common people. He seemed to think he was expected to run things honest, on a business basis, same as he did his stock ranch, and that all alike. Such ignorance is deplorable.

At a meeting of the press association held at Forest Grove last Saturday the work of Jones as secretary was unanimously endorsed, and that gang knows a competent official, but has no "pull" with the governor since his election. They have, however, mighty good memories and much influence with the general public.
