Four pecks will still make a bushel, water will continue to seek its level and taxes will become due and delinquent just the same as before the peppery secretary threw up his job.

And while he is in voluntary retirement, the steps for preparedness will be taken along the lines he did not indorse, unless the peace advocates get in their work hard enough to upset the fat and drop it in the fire.

The retiring secretary shows just one faint glimmer

It is added that "we always left some cherries on the trees for his especial benefit." Out this way it is different. Here sometimes the robins leave and then only when they are overlooked or the crop is too heavy for the birds to harvest.

It is really pathetic the way the English press gets worked up over any act of the Teuton allies that touches the United States, and grows so fearful lest our national honor be smirched if we don't get in and have a row with Germany. She knows Uncle Sam has a long arm and is anxious he should reach in and rake out some of England's chestnuts. Every move the Kaiser makes, the Britishers want Uncle Samuel to "swat him."

The senate committee examining into the fitness of Brandeis for a place on the supreme bench, has discovered that you can't please all the people even part of the time no more than you can fool them all the time. It is the farmers living in the lowlands of the "Beautiful Willamette" who are blue just now instead of the river. They will not remain that way more than a day or so, for most Oregonians are used to plenty of water.

Secretary of War Garrison has resigned—and so is the country.
