So far, experiments have not been satisfactory in this climate, and according to Mr. Posey, plans will be made to develop a spray that will be efficient and practical and one that will control the disease. The three standard mixtures have been successful in treating brown rot in Europe and the eastern states, but climate conditions are different in this valley, and for his reason certain tracts of prunes will be selected on which to experiment with different solutions and mixtures.

Although several spraying experiments have been tried within the past two years, Mr. Posey said that the crops had not been large enough to determine exactly what effect had been produced by the spraying. During the Boston, March 4.-The Braves are on
