Convict Who Imbibes Gets One More Chance

M. F. Hutcheson woke up in the city jail this morning with several things on his mind in addition to a headache. Hutcheson was arrested last night by the Salem police on a charge of being intoxicated but this morning the man remembered that he was an ex-convict and is out on parole. By breaking his parole and getting drunk he was subject to a return to the pen, but Governor Withycombe, after a conference with Parole Officer Joe Keller, decided to give the man another chance and the city will keep him five days while he sobers up.

Hutcheson was sent up from Umatilla county for obtaining money under false pretenses and was paroled last November.
