Calvert Plays Vampire Role With Success

E. H. Calvert takes the role of Hen-ry L. Bancroft, wealthy owner of a de-partment store and a vampire of so-ciety, in the five act Essaany feature, "A Daughter of the City."

"A Daughter of the City."

Mr. Calvert, physically, is a splendid type for the role he plays. Tall, well built and lithe, he suggests the hunter of big game. He has a strong face and a figating jaw, the type of face whose owner fights a fight through regardless of the cost. That is what Henry L. Bancroft does in the play. He has made his money and goes to business because he has contracted the business habit. He is the swift, sure, calculating type of busi-ness man which is excountered in all large American institutions. Nothing affects his business. It is always as strong as he has built it.

But his emotions are tunualtuces and his method of violating to second in

But his emotions are tumultuous and his method of yielding to passions is lawless. So when he meets the heautiful girl, her very innocence aids to the lure she has for him. And Mr. Calvert keeps the type of man he is playing in mind. He is strong, masterful and unserupulous in his hunting.

When he loses, he is merely stunned, not beaten. As the play ends, he realizes that he will hant again, just as domineeringly and just as unserupulously. He is a type, not a man conjured.
