BETTER THAN CALOMEL

Thousands Have Discovered Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a Harmless Substitute

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the substitute for calomel—are a mild but sure laxative, and their effect on the liver is almost instantaneous. They are the result of Dr. Edwards' determination not to treat liver and bowel complaints with calomel. His efforts to banish it brought out these little olive-colored tablets. These pleasant little tablets do the good that calomel does, but have no bad after-effects. They don't injure the teeth like strong liquids or calomel. They take hold of the trouble and quickly correct it. Why the liver at the expense of the teeth? Calomel sometimes plays havoc with the gums. So do strong liquids. It is best not to take calomel, but to let Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets take its place. Most headaches, "dizziness" and that lazy feeling come from constipation and a disordered liver. Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets when you feel "loggy" and "heavy." Note how they "clear" clouded trails and how they "pick up" the spirits. At 10c and 25c per box. All druggists. The Olive Tablet Company, Columbus, O.

ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST BATTLES FOR LIBERTY

Sons of American Revolution to Celebrate—Brief Outline of First Clash

Now that the Sons of the American Revolution are about to observe with a dinner at the Marion hotel the anniversary of the battles of Lexington and Concord, which happened April 19, 1775, the following facts of the battles may be of interest.

British troops were in Boston and were about as popular as Americans are among the soldiers of Villa. The fact is they did not dare show themselves outside of Boston. It is also a historical fact that every American was handy with a rifle and eager to take a shot at a Britisher, if the right occasion should come along.

On the morning of April 19, 1775, General Gage decided to destroy some stores that the "rebels" had collected at Concord. At four in the morning, on the way to Concord, they reached the village of Lexington and found about 60 or 70 of the local militia on the commons. Firing followed and the Americans were dispersed, with a loss of seven killed.

The British then went on a few miles to Concord where they spoiled some flour, knocked the trunions off three iron guns and cut down a liberty pole. While this was going on, General Gage had sent 100 of his infantry to guard a bridge over a nearby creek. At ten o'clock in the morning, these troops were attacked by the country militia and after two or three had fallen on each side, the British troops retreated to Concord.

Although there was nothing in Concord now for the British troops to do, they stayed there rather undecided, until noon, and by that time the American patriots from 30 miles around were coming, many of them veterans of the French and Indian war. The six files of road between Concord and Lexington was lined with woods and from those woods and fences the American poured a fire into the retreating Britishers. As the afternoon wore on, and the British were retreating, the militia from all the surrounding country were coming on. And the fight did not stop until the close of the day when the English came to a halt on the English side of the causeway over which the Cambridge highway entered the town of Concord. Here the guns of the English war vessels protected them. It was a lucky thing for them as patriots from Marblehead and Salem were on their way and within half an hour, would have prevented them from entering their own lines.

In this afternoon fight, while the British were retreating, the Americans lost from 90 to 100 men, of whom more than half were killed outright, and the British three times as many. For 15 months afterwards, the British did not dare show themselves outside of Boston. The battles of Lexington and Concord were really the beginning of the Revolutionary war. A short time afterwards, the battle of Bunker Hill was fought, in which the Americans lost 115 killed and 300 wounded and the British 1040.

Library Notes

Bird houses, made by boys from the manual department of the Washington junior high school, will be an exhibition in the children's department of the public library, beginning next Wednesday. This display is made to encourage the boys from the junior high schools to show their ingenuity in the way of building and to arouse the spirit of emulation among the boys.

A series of teas have been given in the educational room of the library for the grade teachers Wednesday afternoons. The last one of the series will be given next Wednesday. At these meetings there is a formal discussion of the library interests of the several schools. Prof. Hector MacPherson of the Oregon Agricultural College will speak on "Rural Credits" next Friday evening at the public library. He is an authority on the troubles of farmers and has assisted several co-operative stores controlled by farmers, and factories in which farmers were stock holders, to finally get on the road to success.

Ralph Wilson, who lives on Court Street and is a student at the Washington junior high, is something of a ship builder. On display in the children's department of the library may be seen three ships, all made in the correct proportion. The largest is a super-dreadnaught named Oklahama. It is about four feet long, ten inches wide, with six guns on revolving turrets, two conning towers, four life boats, eight rapid fire guns, all painted in the regulation gray.

Parker simply reached out and tagged the runner as he went by and the inning was over. So was the game. The Motorcycle Miques say it was science that won the game, the Liberty Belles, however, maintain that it was pure luck that lost the game for them. Weeks, Ferguson and Phillips served as the battery for the Motorcycle club and Race and Timms made up the battery for Liberty.

Baseball Rebounds From Tree, Cutting Off Winning Run

With the score 11 to 12 against them in the last half of the ninth inning and one man on second, Timms, the Liberty catcher, slammed out a home run which would have won the game if the Salem Motorcycle club had not been aided by a sturdy oak tree in the outfield. The story runs thus:

With two down, Timms hit the ball squarely on the nose and the crack of the wood had not traveled across the diamond before the ball was soaring among the clouds at the rate of more than a mile a minute and going like it had been fired from a 42 centimeter gun. It was still going up when it hit the trunk of a big oak tree that stood well inside the left field. The runner who was on second heard the crack and thinking the ball would never stop, started for the home plate with the tying score. Then the ball rebounded from the tree and Cliff Parker, the Motorcycle shortstop took the ball on the bounce as it was returning to the diamond after its collision with the tree.
