LIVESLEY TO BUILD PATENT HOP DRYER

Dryer Is Salem Men's Invention—Plant Will Cost About $10,000

T. A. Livesley has let the contract for the erection of a hop drying plant to be known as the Livesley hop dryer. The plant will be installed at the Livesley ranch at a cost of $10,000.

The new plant will consist of six dry kilns all under one roof, each 30 feet by 30 feet in size and having three times the capacity of the old style dryer. Thus it is claimed by the inventors that the six kilns will do the work of 18 of the old style kilns since the drying can be done in from six to eight hours while the time required by the old style kiln was from 18 to 24 hours depending upon the weather.

The air is furnished by heated steam coils which are located inside the kiln room. The heated air is driven through the air pipes by a power driven fan which will furnish 100,000 cubic feet of air per minute. From the air pipes the heated air is distributed through a revolving distributor which supplies an equal amount of air to each square inch of the kiln floor. The revolving distributor has numerous outlets which are regulated by thermostats and as an additional check an air damper is placed in the intake pipe and the steam coils are connected in a series so that one coil can be disconnected at a time as the heat rises or it becomes too hot.

The steam heat will be supplied by two 60 horsepower boilers at the Livesley plant and the motive power will be supplied by a 112 horsepower engine amounting to 75 horsepower for a plant of this size. The engine will also run an electric light plant which will supply the lights for night drying when necessary although it is not expected that it will be necessary to dry any hops at night since the kiln can be dried in from six to eight hours.

The boilers will be located in the engine room outside the dry kiln room and no fire will be inside the kilns. The only fire will be in the furnace in the engine room and this will lower the insurance rate to about one-third of the present rate on hops, or to the rate which is quoted for warehouses.

The buildings will be lower than the old style hop dryer since it requires but eight feet of space below the kiln. This will eliminate elevators at the kilns as the hops can be loaded on the kiln platform from the wagons. It also works a huge saving in lumber as it is but 12 feet to the eaves of the new plant. It is estimated that a saving of 41,000 feet of lumber will be made in the proposed plant over the old style kilns of equal capacity.

A saving in wood will also be accomplished as it will require but from one-quarter to one-half cord of wood to dry one kiln while the old style kilns required from one and one-half to two cords per kiln. At the Livesley plant, however, oil will be used for fuel. Also where the old style kilns each required two firemen the new one will require but two men for both shifts which works a saving of 10 men on the six kilns.

Mr. Needham and Mr. Emerick have been working on their new system since last hop drying season and have built a small model of their plant which demonstrates the practicability of the larger one. They have received their patents from the government and the hop growers of the valley generally are anxiously awaiting the outcome of the venture which promises to revolutionize the hop drying system now in use.

Mr. Purvine, the contractor, will complete the new plant by July 1 and Mr. Livesley plans to dry his entire crop this year on the new dryer and will use the two old kilns that remained after last year's disastrous fire which swept away seven kilns in the midst of the hop picking season.
