MEXICO HAS MEN ENOUGH FOR WAR, BUT AMMUNITION AND OTHER SUPPLIES SCARCE

MEXICAN REGULARS on MARCH and ARMORED CAR, WITH GUN'S

In the event of war with Mexico the American authorities will place little reliance, it is said, on the possibility of serious trouble being raised for Carranza by his own people. It is believed the cry that the sovereignty and independent existence of Mexico are threatened by the "gringos" will unite all factions, even the bandits, behind the "first chief," Juan T. Burns, Carranza consul in New York, said he had received information to the effect that 1,000,000 Mexicans had offered to take up arms against the United States. However, these 1,000,000 men, if they have really volunteered—or even a much smaller number—could not be used effectively in war since there is not enough ammunition in Mexico for even 100,000 men to keep up a fight for one month, it is asserted on good authority. Pictures show a Mexican armored car with field gun in the middle and a body of Mexican infantry on the march.
