TWO SMALL FIRES CALLED BOYS OUT

Roof on Japanese Laundry, and Reinhoel Grocery Damaged

"Where's the fire," demanded the chief as the auto pumper came to a stop in front of the Japanese hand laundry at 445 Perry street, last night at 6:45 o'clock.

"No fire," replied the Jap as he stood in the doorway and beamed on the chief.

The latter allowed his gaze to drift upward. A wreath of smoke was curling under the roof. He yelled to the firemen and dashed upstairs. It took half an hour to put out the fire which had started around a flue and gained considerable headway beneath the tin roof.

The Jap didn't know his house was afire until the department arrived and wouldn't believe it then. Peter Andersen, engineer in the Bank of Commerce building turned in the alarm as he saw the flames from a neighboring building.

The building is owned by Frank Hughes. Loss will be about $100.

Later in the evening the department was called to Capitol and Union streets to fight a stubborn blaze in the Reinhoel grocery store. The loss is estimated at about $200.
