ROAD PRESIDENT'S

roads felt in the present situation that they were fighting for the principle of arbitration, which he said was the only remaining protection, not only for the railroads, but for all the other industries of the country, against the aggressions of labor. The railroad presidents were reinforced by hundreds of letters and telegrams from big manufacturers and employers urging them not to yield the "right and justice of arbitration."

The employees have made it known that they will not recede from their position beyond the points conceded at President Wilson's request. Any concessions made now, it was declared, must come from the operators. The railroad presidents indicated almost uniformly that when they give their final answer to the president, it will not be an acceptance of his proposition.

The news that the general committee balloting had resulted in acceptance of the president's suggestion was carried to the White House by President Garretson of the conductors and Lee of the trainmen.

May Come to Head Today.

Washington, Aug. 18.—The railway wage conflict—with the threat of a general strike hanging over all proceedings—appeared likely to come to a head before today ends.

With favorable action by the 640 representatives of the railroad brotherhoods forecast as they met to vote on President Wilson's proposed basis of settlement, greatest interest centered in the attitude of the railway presidents. The latter began arriving last night and practically all of those to whom the president wired yesterday were expected to be present when his conference with them opened.

A few too far distant to reach here in time sent personal representatives from nearer points.

At 10 o'clock, failure of some of the western railway presidents to reach Washington caused postponement of the conference with President Wilson, scheduled for 11:30. The delay made it likely that the decision of the brotherhoods would be known before the presidents gathered in the White House.

Managers in Hostile Mood.

The railway presidents came in a more or less hostile mood. Their inclination, frankly expressed by some of them, was to support the position of their managers who have declined to accede to the president's proposal that concessions of the eight-hour day (at present 10-hour pay), be made the basis for settlement, other issues then to be investigated and settled by a special commission.

While the big gathering of railway employees was preparing to vote at the Bijou theatre "yes" or "no" on the president's plan, the railway presidents were conferring with their managers.

It was considered likely the president would tell them that his proposition is submitted after a deep study of both sides of the questions made for more than a month as the threatened strike began coming to a head. He was expected to reiterate that he believes the eight-hour day can be successfully applied to railroad operation without prohibitive additional cost and with resultant better work and working conditions.

Two o'clock this afternoon was devoted to the time for meeting the railway presidents. Tentative choice of Hale Holden, president of the Burlington, as spokesman of the presidents was ratified on the arrival of other western presidents shortly before noon. Holden is a lawyer and a forceful speaker, it is said. He was a lieutenant of James J. Hill for years. Being from the west it is the view of the other presidents that he can be considered free from Wall street influence.

The noon arrivals were Presidents Ashton, Chicago & Northwestern; Markham, Illinois Central; Carpenter, Chicago, Terre Haute & Southern; Bierd, Chicago & Alton; Potter, Carolina, Cincinnati & Ohio; W. J. Jackson, representing the Chicago & Eastern Illinois.

The 31 railroad presidents entered the White House at 2 o'clock. In marked contrast to the entrance of the 640 employees, who marched up to the executive mansion four abreast, the railroad executives, for the most part, swept up the White House drive in taxicabs and automobiles. Only a few of them walked.

The union leaders found they could not complete the balloting and counting on the president's proposal before noon and adjourned for lunch until 2:30.

History Making Times.

What will be the next step should the president fail to gain agreement of the presidents to his proposition was not disclosed early today. Dramatic events have followed rapidly during the course of negotiations in the last two days. Never in the history of American labor has a president had about him in one day such representatives of industry attempting to solve such a crisis.

The gathering of railway presidents of itself is the biggest of its kind ever held. Never for any purpose of their own did so many of them assemble.

The president was up at an early hour and in his study preparing the appeal he will make to the railroad presidents today in conjunction with the proposition he will offer for settlement.

He called off the regular cabinet meeting in order to give his full attention to this.

About the hotel where the railroad presidents and managers are stopping there was an atmosphere of seriousness throughout the morning. Elsie Lee, spokeswoman for the managers, went to breakfast at 9 o'clock. He would say nothing about the situation.

THROWN OUT OF AUTO

Last Sunday seemed to be accident day for the autos in and around Stayton. None of the spills amounted to much and no one badly hurt. Perhaps the one in which the occupants got scarred the most was the overturning of a Ford runabout east of town. Don Moore of Stayton and Miss Amelia Glover were considerably thrown out and both were considerably injured but no serious damage done. The accident was caused by the steering gear going wrong.—Stayton Mail.

MAY COERCE RAILROADS

Washington, Aug. 18.—Talk of compulsory arbitration as a last means of heading off a railroad strike was heard in congress today. In the event the president fails to bring about a settlement, some senators—administration men included—believe congress should enact at once a compulsory arbitration measure that could be made effective before brotherhoods had time to strike.

RED SOX STILL LEAD IN RACE FOR PENNANT

Teams Swing Into the Homestretch and Are All Running Under the Whip

New York, Aug. 18.—With their drive toward the American league pennant only started on the home grounds, the Boston Red Sox hook up with the White Sox again today after falling yesterday before the bats of the Chicago crowd, who pounded Carl Mays for seven runs in four and a third innings and won the third game of the series with the leaders. At the same time in New York, Cleveland was losing to the Yanks and in Washington, Detroit hammered the Senators for a double victory.
